THE PET OF THE PUBLIC.

BY THE AUTHOR OF THE "SWEDISH MAIDEN," &C.

CHAPTER VIII.

TIME TRAVELS FAST.

It wanted about a week to Christmas and the season was the most severe that had been known for many years.

Hours after it had grown dark poor little Lucy, shivering with cold, continued crawling on from street to street, endeavoring to obtain a few halfpence, with which, for a few hours, to procure herself the shelter of a roof. Her head was bare, and her long hair was spotted all over with flakes of snow.

The song she was attempting to sing froze upon her lips, and from time to time she stopped before the shops, and, looking through them into a room beyond, saw children like herself warming themselves around a blazing fire.

The shops were closed, and Lucy had obtained no more than was barely sufficient to purchase her a little food.

As a last hope, the poor child stopped before a public house, and placing herself close to the door that, if possible, her now weak and trembling voice might penetrate to the interior, she commenced to sing. She was not, however, allowed to proceed far with her song, for in less than a minute the potman came to the door, saying:—

"You be off. We don't want any squalling here."

As Lucy turned away, weeping, she was arrested by a man wearing a good stout great coat and a comforter round his throat.

Andrew Wentworth was a middle aged man and an actor at one of the minor theatres. He was no genius, he was merely what is called in the theatrical profession a "utility man;" that is to say, he was made to play an endless variety of parts; in one piece he would be a virtuous father, and in the next a murderous ruffian, but never standing forth before the public in any prominent position. His salary was small—he had never, indeed, received anything like a large one throughout his life—and, taking into account the times when the theatres were closed, or he was either ill or without an engagement, Andrew Wentworth had quite enough to do to struggle along and make both ends meet. And it was a pity that his salary should always be so small for he had a large heart.

At first little Lucy was afraid of him, but he questioned her so kindly and pityingly, that in a few moments he had won her confidence.

At any rate, considering that the snow was falling heavily, that she was cold and hungry, and absolutely homeless, it cannot be wondered at that she should consent to trust herself with one who, for that night, at least, had promised her both food and shelter.

Wentworth, who had not had, that evening, to act in the last piece, had been on his way home when he encountered little Lucy.

He had never been married—he had always considered marriage one of the many luxuries not to be purchased with his small salary—and lived in a very humble lodging, which for years he had occupied.

He told his landlady in what way he had found Lucy, asked her to make up a bed for the child, and the good woman, who very highly esteemed her lodger, very readily consented to his request.

The actor's room was snug and warm, and his cupboard by no means empty. After supper, Lucy related her whole history to her new found benefactor, and with what emotion he listened, what he said, and what he thought concerning it, there is no occasion that we should relate. After breakfast, on the following morning, Lucy timidly said:—

"I suppose sir, I am to go away now?"

"I suppose you are to do nothing of the sort," said Wentworth. "Stay you here till I come back from rehearsal."

And directly he had returned he said to Lucy:—

"Come here, my girl—I have been speaking to our stage manager about you, and you are to be in the pantomime, and to have a shilling a night."

"So much money as that," cried Lucy, who was ready to jump out of her skin for joy.

With a few shillings supplied by Wentworth, and with the assistance of the landlady, Lucy was, the following day, neatly and comfortably dressed, far better indeed than she ever before had been. Taken to the theatre by the man who had so generously constituted himself her guardian, Lucy was amazed at all she beheld, having expected to see only a place resembling Silas Sloper's booth. And greatly was Lucy admired and petted by the actors and actresses, for all were struck with her marvelous loveliness. On boxing night, how proud and happy was Lucy, when, as a little fairy, she found herself standing high up among the splendors of the transformation scene. When the pantomime had closed its career, Lucy would have felt very wretched, but that she was told by her protector that she was to remain with him, and that he would take care of her until such time as she had grown big enough to take care of herself. While she remained young enough, Lucy was occasionally engaged to play the part of a child, that is, when there happened to be such a character in any one of the pieces produced. As she grew towards womanhood, a permanent engagement, to play very small parts, for a small salary was given to her. Time rolled on. Lucy had reached her eighteenth year, and had, so to speak, grown to womanhood behind the scenes of a theatre. And all this time the young girl had not known whether her father had lived or died, nor what had become of her little sister Sophy. Lucy had been so young when torn from her home that if she had even known, which is doubtful, she had soon forgotten the name of the village in which she had been born. As to the name of the county in which the village was situated, it is quite certain she had never known anything about that. Feeling convinced that his protege was not without talent for the stage, Wentworth set about procuring for her an opportunity for its display.

By dint of perseverance he succeeded in obtaining for Lucy, at another minor theatre, an engagement to play secondary characters.

But before we come to her first appearance, under what were supposed to be very promising circumstances, we shall have to treat of a very different matter, and to introduce a new personage into our story.

CHAPTER IX.

A FIRST APPEARANCE.

Little as she had been placed before the public, that Lucy was very beautiful had not been unobserved, nor her charms altogether unappreciated.

Many letters had been written to her by young men, frequenters of the theatre in which she held so subordinate a position, all of which as soon as glanced at, had been cast into the fire.

By several of the smitten young gentlemen had Lucy again and again been watched and waited for at the stage door, but as she never returned home unaccompanied by Andrew Wentworth, all their trouble, all their efforts to obtain speech with her were rendered vain and fruitless.

There was, however, amongst them a young man who would not submit to be thus baffled.

Egerton Booth was what is termed a man about town, and reckless, dissipated and unprincipled to the last degree.

In possession of a good income, pleasure was his only pursuit, and so that he could but gratify his wishes, littled scrupled he the means.

Frequenting by turns every place of amusement in London, he had chanced to visit a theatre at which Lucy was engaged on one of those seldom occurring nights when she had been entrusted with a small part in one of the dramas. Seeing her, he had said she should be his, and had anticipated little difficulty in winning her to himself. Waiting at the stage door he had been foiled in the same way that had been Lucy's other, and doubtless, more honest admirers. At first he had believed Wentworth to be the young girl's father, but was soon undeceived on that point, and from one of the actors whom he invited to sup with him at a tavern, Egerton Booth learnt some particulars of Lucy's former career. Calculating on that, and that her present position was but little removed from absolute poverty, he felt sure of obtaining an easy prey. Every evening Lucy accompanied her guardian to the theatre, and remaining till he had finished his night's work, returned home with him. But Egerton was not to be thus defeated, and having traced Lucy to her home, hovered round it day after day. And after a few days he saw Andrew Wentworth leave the house alone, and having watched him fairly on his way to the theatre, returned to the dwelling in question, and asked to be allowed to see Miss Lucy Rutley.

"Do you come from the theatre, sir," said the landlady.

"Yes," replied Booth, "I have a message for her from the manager."

He was left alone with Lucy. But not long, for scarcely a minute had passed when the young girl, throwing open the door of the room, called aloud, entreating that the landlady would come to her. Waiting not for that good woman's arrival, Egerton Booth hurried from the house. A week or two afterwards, Lucy was one morning proceeding to the theatre alone, her guardian having preceded her for an earlier rehearsal, when, on her way she was again accosted by that insolent libertine. He walked by her side polluting her ear with infamous proposals, till she had reached within a few yards of the stage door, and then he turned and hurried away.

"If he troubles you again," Wentforth said to Lucy, "speak to a policeman and he will rid you of the scoundrel."

But Lucy resolved not again to go out alone, and, adhering to that determination, saw nothing of Booth for several weeks, and came at last to believe that he would trouble her no more. But, most unfortunately for her, she was to find herself mistaken.

One morning Lucy had been left alone in the house, Wentworth had gone to the theatre, and the landlady was out marketing. There came a quiet, single knock at the street door, which Lucy proceeded to and opened.

Egerton Booth dashed into the house and closed the door upon himself and Lucy.

The young girl retreated into one of the parlors, and the well dressed ruffian followed her.

"At length, lovely creature," said Booth, "I have found, or rather made, an opportunity of again saying a few words to you."

"What would you with me, sir?" demanded Lucy; and, to the man's surprise, quite boldly confronting him.

"Why ask me what I would with you, when you know so well?"

"I know that you have pursued and persecuted me shamefully, and like a coward."

"If only once you had quietly listened to me, one way or other, there would have been an end of what you so unjustly term my persecutions."

"And should I listen to you now?"

"Our interview will be decisive and should you wish it, the last that will occur between us."

"In that case I will hear you, sir."

"Well, then," insolently said Egerton, "to commence, do not imagine that I am to be played with, nor that any of your artful prudery will be of any use with me, for I know what you are, what you have been, and what you will be."

"Say on, sir."

"You have been a show girl, a tumbler, and rope dancer."

"Yes."

"You are now an actress of the lowest rank in the profession and miserably poor."

"Yes"

"And you will be my mistress?"

"No."

"If so scrupulous, how came you then to be a show girl?"

"Because I was compelled to it."

"And you quitted that life?"

"Because disgusted with it."

"To become one of the underlings of a minor theatre?"

"Because it was necessary that I should earn my own support."

"And wherefore do you refuse me?"

"Because you are a contemptible wretch and I despise you."

"Well done," said the villian, coolly and quietly, and rather mockingly besides, "you said that with such an air of dignity that I could almost persuade myself to believe that there is about you the making of a great actress! I expected not so much spirit and determination, you have made me more eager for the game, and more than ever resolved to make you mine."

"I do not fear you."

"My dear girl, you are ignorant altogether of life, except that sort of life which is to be found behind the scenes of a minor theatre, and amongst the outcasts of the profession."

"And if you are a fair specimen, what are they in your world?" said Lucy.

"But only think, my charmer—muslins and velvets, silks and satins, a carriage and a box at the opera, and at all the theatres. Think how all the actresses, who now treat you as a mere nobody, would then envy you? And besides all that, my angel, a hundred pounds a month."

"You have nothing more to offer?"

"Well, no—I think not," said Booth, believing that the young girl was about to yield.

LUCY'S TRIUMPH—EGERTON BOOTH'S DISCOMFITURE.

See Chapter X of "The Pet of the Public."

"Then, sir, you have forgotten something."

"What is that?"

"The man who is to pay all that?"

"Ah!—the protector?"

"No," forcibly cried Lucy, "the idiot or the insolent villain."

"Not bad," smiled Booth. "And in which class do you range me? The innocent villains or the idiots?"

"In both, sir."

The man was stung and could not conceal it.

"Come, come," he cried, "let us talk reason; I am rich."

"So much the worse," replied Lucy, "your means to be wicked are the greater."

"I am young."

"Still so much the worse! You will be the longer able to pursue your wickedness."

"You are poor."

"Yes, true."

"Perhaps you believe that you are about to prove yourself a great actress, and to become suddenly rich and idolized? You are about, I know, to try your fortune at another theatre."

"Well, sir?"

"Well, consent to be mine, and I answer for your success. Thunders of applause shall reward your efforts, you shall be inundated with a deluge of boquets, the newspapers shall pronounce you a veritable Siddons, and the public shall flock to see and admire you."

"And pray, sir, how would you accomplish all that?"

"With money, which can accomplish everything."

"And if I refuse you?"

"You will fail."

"You think so?"

"I am sure so. And you will return to that insignificance from which you now believe yourself about to emerge."

"We shall see."

"I will do my best that no manager may hereafter engage you."

"Wretch!"

"And in any case, I will make it to your manager's interest that you shall never distinguish yourself."

"You are sufficiently cowardly even for that."

"And I will also endeavor to arrange so that the stupid old Wentworth's services may be dispensed with, so that he may no longer have the miserable pittance to share with you—then, what would you do?"

"I would not bring such misery on him, but would go my own way, and suffer alone."

"Yes—and then?"

"I would die cursing you!" Lucy energetically exclaimed.

"Intractable girl," cried Egerton, and endeavoring to throw his arm round her waist.

"I forbid you to approach me," she cried, retreating a step and waving him from her.

"Beware, try me not too far—beware!"

"You are more foolish even than I believed you, if you imagine that you can frighten me," Lucy said, disdainfully, and flashing on him from her large and brilliant eyes a look which was not without its effect, since without another word she abrubtly quitted the house.

When the day had arrived on which Lucy was to make her first appearance, on which so much depended, and from which she was hoping so much, Egerton Booth said to his valet—as great a villain as his master:—

"I have told you, Simpson, of that young lady who to-night will make her first appearance at ——"

"Ah, yes, Miss Lucy Rutley," said Simpson with a cunning leer. "I know, boquets, bravos, a tremendous success. All shall be arranged sir."

"No, no; nothing of the sort, Simpson. You must provide me with about twenty fellows, every one of them as great a rascal as yourself, if that be possible."

"Everything is to be found in London, sir," grinned the man.

"Men who will do exactly as they are told."

"They shall be as docile as lambs, sir."

"And then, at the theatre, in honor of Miss Lucy Rutley, a storm, a clamor, a constant and tremendous uproar."

"Oh, ho! sir, then you have altered your mind about ——"

"Yes, yes; hisses, derisive shouts, cries of all sorts. I shall be there to support you, for I have determined that the young lady's first appearance shall also prove her last."

In the evening, Egerton Booth, with four or five of his "fast" friends, occupied a private box directly over the stage of the theatre with which for the present we have to do.

During the performance of the first piece—Lucy was not to appear until the second—Booth and his companions made themselves particularly obnoxious, and interfered continually with the enjoyment of the audience.

They laughed loudly at the pathetic portions of the play which brought tears to the eyes of all the other spectators, and loudly yawned when all except themselves were laughing heartily.

A sentimental speech they rewarded with cries of "hear, hear," and derisive applause; in short, they left nothing undone to show their contempt for both play and audience, and ever and anon voices had shouted, "Turn them out."

At length, one of the officers attached to the theatre entered their box, and spoke to them, and for the next half hour or so they were tolerably quiet.

They had been threatened with expulsion, and that would not at all have answered Egerton's purpose.

The second piece commenced, and the debutante of the evening entered on the scene, and on the instant that Lucy showed herself arose a terrible and deafening clamor.

The men whom Booth's valet had distributed about the theatre, well earned their hire.

Shriekings, hootings, and whistlings were met with shouts of indignation and cries for the police.

Hisses and applause; mingled cries of "Bravo," and "Off, off!" while not a few were exclaiming, "Shame!" and "Let her speak!"

The uproar altogether was something indescribable. The party in that private box were the most violent and the noisiest of all, and placed a hand on each side of their mouth in order to increase the force of their shoutings.

Lucy, utterly confounded, vainly endeavored to speak; advancing first and then retreating, she appeared bewildered, and perfectly stunned at the uproar with which she was assailed.

Suddenly, Booth threw on the stage some fireworks, which exploded at Lucy's feet, causing her to scream with affright.

Then, bursts of laughter, and increased howlings, especially from the stage box.

And all at once Lucy advanced towards the footlights, and with such a show of resolution that the whole house became silent; even those who had originated the disturbance seemed for the moment stricken dumb.

The poor girl was very pale and her white lips trembled, but her voice was firm and sonorous. She raised her hand towards the box and pointed distinctly towards Egerton Booth, and disturbed a silence amidst which you might have heard the buzzing of a fly, by saying loudly and clearly:—

"I should have been applauded even more vociferously than I have been hissed, if I would have consented to sell myself to that man and become his mistress."

And as she finished speaking the poor girl sank fainting into the arms of one of the actors, who bore her from the stage.

The uproar which previously had reigned was as nothing to that which then ensued. Howls of execration were directed towards the private box, and several men commenced to clamber from the pit over the orchestra, on to the stage, and the musicians, carefully guarding their instruments, darted down and disappeared as quickly as possible.

Egerton and his friends fled from their box and from the theatre, and not without reason rejoiced that they had escaped with a whole skin.

Tranquillity was after a while restored, and another piece substituted for that in which Lucy was to have performed, while she herself was taken home by her poor old guardian, and both of them perfectly heartbroken.

CHAPTER X.

ANOTHER FIRST APPEARANCE.

That new engagement from which so much had been expected was, after Lucy's disastrous first appearance, immediately cancelled.

That was not all, for Andrew Wentworth received a month's notice from the manager, who was highly incensed that such an uproar had been caused within, and such a scandal brought upon his theatre. For several months those two were without engagements, and so badly off did they become that it had almost grown to be a question with them as to where the next meal might be obtained. At length, however, both obtained employment at a West End Theatre, Wentworth for the utility business, to which only he had been accustomed nearly all his life; and Lucy, to figure in groups of peasantry or ladies of the court, and occasionally to speak a line or two, such as:—

"A letter for your lordship," or—

"The carriage waits, my lady."

And in that sort of way more years passed on, and Lucy was nearly twenty-two. Over and over again had she proposed to Wentworth that she should endeavor, by some other means, to obtain her livelihood, but the old man would not hear of such a thing. He had, he told her, a presentiment that the stage would yet be a fortune to her, repeating a thousand times that she had wonderful talent which required only to be known to make her one of the greatest women that had ever existed in the theatrical world. By her guardian's desire Lucy studied the great female parts both in tragedy and comedy, rehearsing them at home before Wentworth, who, although himself an actor of very humble grade, was well able by his long experience to instruct and improve his pupil.

Occasionally Lucy had encountered Egerton Booth, who, passing her with a smile of contemptuous pity and a glance at her faded attire, would say:—

"Behold the reward of virtue!"

Wentworth came to be thought a bore, and was the jest of everybody in the theatre down to the very scene shifters, because he was constantly asserting that his pupil, as he always called Lucy, was really and positively the very cleverest creature that had ever lived.

"Ah!" he would in his vexation say, "she is wonderfully clever, I tell you, and you can see for yourselves that she is beautiful; but she is an honest girl, and so will find it difficult to make her way in the theatrical word, poor thing! My protection and my word that she has talent go for nothing. I couldn't undertake to fill the stalls or the boxes when she makes her appearance!"

The manager was deaf to all the old man's appeals, looked with contempt on Lucy's well worn and carefully [illegible] dress and advanced her not beyond that miserable position in the theatre which she had held. How long that sort of thing continued we have said, how much longer it would have endured we may imagine, but for an event which we are now about to relate.

One evening, the leading actress was taken suddenly and rather seriously ill after her arrival at the theatre, and within half an hour of the time at which the performance should commence.

The house was full and the manager was distracted at the thought that he might be compelled to return something considerable of the money that had been taken at the doors.

The "Hunchback" was the play, and there was no Julia!

Wentworth flew to the manager, exclaiming:—

"My pupil knows the part—perfect to the letter, and she can act it magnificently; don't change the piece, don't give the people back their money, my pupil can act it, she can indeed!"

The manager hesitated, and consulted the stage manager; and presently the former said—

"Well, Wentworth, let her get dressed, and then we will see."

And when they saw Lucy in her costume, she looked so supremely beautiful, so radiantly superb, that her very appearance inspired the manager and his factotum with confidence. The indisposition of their favorite actress was announced to the audience; they were told that a young lady—no name was mentioned—had kindly undertaken, at a minute's notice, to attempt the character and they threw themselves upon the indulgence of a generous public, etc., etc. There were a few groans and hisses—there are always those on such occasions—but no one showed any disposition to quit the theatre, which, perhaps, was accounted for the fact that, luckily, as the manager thought, it commenced to pour with rain.

When the time for Lucy's entrance on the stage had arrived, poor old Andrew Wentworth embraced her, and his lips shaped the words:—

"Courage, my child, you are sure to make a hit—" but no sound followed; emotion had robbed him of his voice.

And Lucy trembled like a leaf, she staggered and seemed about to fall. But, collecting all her strength, she walked upon the stage and was received with a loud burst of applause. Her beauty had produced its effect, and even before she had spoken a word, her success was a certainty. At first the people applauded to encourage her! but soon to express their delight, for Lucy was sublime. At the end of the act she was called before the curtain and overwhelmed with applause. Triumphantly returning behind the scenes, she stumbled against poor old Andrew Wentworth, who had sunk to the floor, overpowered and made lil by his great joy. As the play progressed, each succeding scene was an added triumph for Lucy, and the enthusiasm of the audience grew beyond all precedent. Wentworth had a short part to play, and once when on the stage at the same time with Lucy, his great excitement caused him to forget the words he should have said, and the audience hissed him. Lucy turned towards him and whispered:—

"Don't mind, don't mind!"

And he in the same tone replied:—

"Bless you, I don't!"

And as he stood upon the stage, looking towards the audience, was thinking:—

"Applaud my little Lucy, and if it at all amuses you, hiss me as hard as you like. She has talent, and mine is all gone, if ever I had any. She is beginning and I am finishing! every one in their turn—and at last Lucy's turn has come—and it is a turn, too!"

Led before the audience at the end of the play, the stage was presently almost covered with bouquets. As they fell at her feet, Lucy looked down towards them, and thought of the squibs and crackers with which, on a former appearance she had been saluted. And by an odd coincidence, her eyes at the same instant fell on Egerton Booth himself, who was sitting in the very centre of the foremost row of stalls. Evidently he was more surprised than pleased, for his face was white as ashes, and its distorted features told of the malignant passions raging within his polluted bosom. Beholding that man there and thus, Lucy flashed on him a brief, but very expressive look, which, without difficulty he comprehended, and which pierced him like a red hot iron. And it will be pardoned to her that, for one moment, her triumph over that craven wretch was more delightful to her than even the cheers and bravos which then were ringing in her ears.

The manager gathered up and gave to Lucy as many bouquets as her arms would hold, and himself guarding the rest, announced to the audience that Miss Lucinda Mordaunt would again appear on the following evening. And when he had left the stage with her, said:—

"You won't be offended that I have taken the liberty to give you a new name? There is a great deal in a name, I assure you, Shakspeare to the contrary, notwithstanding."

From that poor neglected girl, hiding herself away in a corner, Lucy had, like magic, it appeared to her, become an object to be worshipped and adored, for the actors and actresses crowded around to congratulate and bow down to her. The actress engaged to represent "old women," said to the "chamber-maid:"—

"Some people have the luck of it, my dear; such a chance never happened to me when I played leading tragedy, and I think I was quite as clever, and just as pretty as that girl. But luck is everything, and nobody would ever be taken ill to oblige me."

Lucy and Wentworth were conveyed home that night in the manager's brougham, into which he himself, with many bows, assisted our heroine.

"Good night, Miss Mordaunt," he said, "I leave the terms of the engagement entirely to you; I know you will not be too hard upon me."

Then, almost shaking the old man's arm off:—

"Good night, my dear Mr. Wentworth, good night, my dear sir."

In Wentworth's hand he left a ten pound note; a few hours' before he would have refused to lend him ten shillings. Miss Lucinda Mordaunt became the fashion; the critics pronounced her to be the greatest actress that had been seen for many years, and crowded houses testified to her popularity. The idol of the public, most thoroughly was she hated by the "leading lady," whose sudden indisposition had afforded that opportunity which so long had been desired for his pupil by Wentworth, and if at all thought of, considered hopeless by Lucy herself. But Lucy behaved very generously to the actress she had supplanted. A few days, and our heroine found herself inhabiting quite a stately mansion, and visited, and her society courted by the rich and fashionable. Life then was to her supremely delicious, the past like some unpleasant dream; while looking into the future she pictured to herself constantly increasing fame and fortune, with all the happiness which must of necessity, as she believed, follow in their train. Alas! little deemed she that her past sufferings were to be as nothing compared with those awaiting her in the future, which she so smilingly was regarding. Soon was she to learn what poor defences are fame and fortune against calamity and woe.

FAIRS.—A state fair is a queen; an agricultural fair is a farmer's daughter; a church fair is a parson's wife; a soldier's fair is the best looking girl he can get hold of; a charity fair is a female pauper; and the most unpopular fair in the universe is boarding house fare.

SUNSHINE AND SHADOW.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER.

The summer zephyr rustled near
The dancing leaves above,
Bent down in silent bliss to hear
The whispered tales of love.
How priceless now beyond compare
The memory they impart,
When love imprinted softly there
Its sunshine on the heart.
In golden beams inspirated there
Its sunshine on the heart.

The birds were singing sweetly then,
It seemed a hear'n of bliss
That echoed back his music when
He gave the good bye kiss.
We little dreamed, when lips pressed lips,
How soon we were to part,
But shadows threatened to eclipse
The sunshine on the heart;
Unseen, they threatened to eclipse
The sunshine on the heart.

He left me with a loving kiss,
Beside the bright sea shore;
We parted then in joy and bliss
To meet—ah, never more!
And ever thus, when skies are bright,
Across love's blue will dart
A looming cloud, to cast a blight
And shadow on the heart;
A cloud to cast a weary blight
And shadow on the heart.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER,

BY F. A.

The subject of this sketch was born on the banks of a mud puddle known as the duck pond; his parients were unpretending and modest; his father, in early life, had been a blacksmith and horse shoer, but by the death of a relative he came in possession of five thousand dollars; he sold out his shop, bought a horse, good clothes, diamond ring, a watch, etc.; he drank the best whiskey, smoked the best segars, and spent his time in the best bar-rooms and club houses. Among the boys he was nicknamed Shoddy, because he had shod so many horses in his time.

Andrew King, at the age of one year, might have been seen navigating his ships, made of chips, on this grand duck pond; he also amused himself by catching frogs, tying strings to their rare pedal extremities, and driving them around. Thus, at the early age of one year, he was interested both on land and sea. One of his favorite amusements was riding the ducks to water; this was not enough though, and one day he attempted to ride a hurdle race on one of his mother's favorite ducks, for which he received a severe chastisement and a good ducking in the duck pond; from this age till about five he kept on his innocent amusements.

It was about the twenty-fifth day of January, in his fifth year, a Monday, about five o'clock in the afternoon, that his mother thought she discovered in him the actions and manners of the rising man. What was he doing? He was dividing his attention between an old clay pipe and a half emptied whiskey bottle with evident satisfaction. From this time forward these signs increased; he could stand on the corner and spit tobacco juice in the gutter, and swear a string of blue oaths that would take the hair off a bull dog; these signs grew more noticeable; at school even they were noticed. One day his teacher had occasion to explain to another schoolmate a sentence, saying that the word Richard—the pupil's name—was a noun, to which Andrew replied that Richard is himself, and, by adding the word again, we have "Richard is himself again." This was all noticed by his parients, who took him to a phrenologist, and he discovered a very large bunch under his left ear, which he had received in a fight with another juvenile pugilist. He declared it to be the bump of mimicry, wit, and a love of declaiming.

Every night he could be seen in front of the —— Theatre grubbing checks, and more than one night in a week could he be seen in the front row of the peanut brigade, in the gallery. His parients, seeing his fondness for the drama, and bearing in mind the words of the phrenologist, consented to take him to the theatre once a year. During his first visit with them his close attention to the play was noticed by his parients, and his father with pride exclaimed:—"He is the next thing to an actor now." He was sitting by the side of the great comedian, Pattie Stewart—his mother knowingly winked. He could now be seen carrying around the street programmes of the —— Theatre; he took especial pride in doing it, because they were theatre bills, and it was the only employment he could find to do. Every night, a little before eight, found him at the stage door of the —— Theatre, there with envy he watched the company, from leading man to super, enter; after the performance commenced he would grub checks in front.

Things could not go on long this way. One night, while watching the company enter, he was mysteriously taken aside into a dark alley way by a suspicious looking person, who said:—

"Johnny, do you want to go on the stage and be an actor?"

What! Did his ears deceive him? Go on the stage and be an actor! The cherished hope of his life. He managed to articulate:—

"Yes, sir."

"Well, you come here to-morrow night at this time with a dollar and I'll get you on," said the individual, and disappeared through the stage door.

Andrew could hardly contain himself as he walked home. At last his wish was granted. Now, instead of watching the company enter, he would enter with them, he would be one of them, and the urchins in whose front rank he lately could be numbered would now gaze on him with silent awe, and look upon him as a king. The appointed time found him money in hand and waiting impatiently. He had not long to wait before the individual made his appearance, and, after securing the money, told Andrew to follow him, which he did; and as they passed through the stage door the individual said to a person who sat on a very low stool reading a newspaper by a very poor gaslight:—

"It's all right, P——; he is one of P——'s new men."

To which the person on the stool replied:—

"Well, begorra, there's enough of ye's running in here now, without getting any more; go long, yer—"

The individual didn't wait to hear any more, but conducted Andrew on through dark passage ways, and between piles of scenery; one minute he would knock his head against a scene or piece of timber, and the next moment he would be dazzled by a bright gas light; by one was standing a lot of rough looking men in their shirt sleeves, who were reading from a paper, and as he passed he heard:—

"Well, the plot says a set door." He had no time to hear more, for he had come to a flight of stairs down which he went before he knew it, and with such force as to land sprawling on the floor at the bottom; quickly picking himself up, he followed his companion into a low, small, dark room, crowded with men and tobacco smoke; he had no time to notice more, as he was accosted by a thin, hatchet faced, curly headed person, who, after demanding his name, said:—

"You put on that dress and come up with the rest," and to another person:—"Purk, you see to him, will you?" and then left.

Andrew commenced putting on the suit as fast and the best he knew how; his thoughts of suddenly becoming an actor disappeared. Was this becoming an actor? He was every minute rudely jostled, and it was with great difficulty that he dressed himself. At last, as he was buttoning the last button, he followed the rest, from a command of "come up," from somebody following the rest; he soon found himself amongst kings, queens, lords, etc. What need is there of our following him; he kept on in the same routine; he became acquainted, and was entrusted with a part; that is, he was to carry on the hero of the piece, who had been wounded; his ambition was satisfied; his great wish granted; for a week before the evening of the performance he did nothing but carry sticks of wood from his father's shed to his cellar, not that the actor was a stick, oh, no. The night arrived; he trembled at the thought, but after a few visits to a saloon opposite his courage arose, and he had confidence enough to play the leading part.

The performance was over and everything had passed off satisfactorily, and Andrew was one, if not two inches higher; he kept on until one day he was to play a speaking part of one line; he could hardly contain himself; he rushed home, and, not without fear as to the result, he informed his parients—who until now were ignorant where he spent his evenings—that he was to speak on the stage to-night, and then told them all. After a long talk they consented to be present, and an hour and a half before the time found them on hand, and patiently they sat out that hour and a half, and when at last the orchestra came straggling up they pulled open their eyes, and sitting up, they watched for Andrew. The play was through, and anxiously had they looked for Andrew, but they had not seen him; had they took notice of a motly crowd of gipsies, they would have seen him with the rest, exclaiming in a sonorous voice:—

But no words of his could convince them that he was there, and they looked upon it as a cruel and expensive trick. We need follow him no further; he made rapid advancement in the profession, and was thinking of starring, when he was invited to see a friend who said he would be away six months; and as he wouldn't let him come and stay six months; and as he wouldn't let him come and stay six months; and as he returns from his visit his friends will hear from him. In the meantime, however, if any of his friends wish to see him, they can find him at Sing Sing.

SWALLOWED A MOUSE.—John Haynes recently made a mistake, very natural to one in his condition. He imagined that he was indulging in copious libations of benzine, when, in fact, he was drinking genuine linseed oil. Shortly afterwards John felt a queer taste coming into his mouth. The first idea that occured to him was that he was poisoned. A physician was sent for, and he applied a stomach pump. "Is there arsenic in it, doctor?" faintly inquired the patient. "No," replied the Esculapius, "it smells like a newly painted house." "What?" screamed John. "Smells like a newly painted house," repeated the physician. "Heaven," cried the now excited patient, "you don't mean to tell me that I've swallowed a house?"

To Correspondents.

READER OF CLIPPER, New Haven, Conn.—1. The yacht Wanderer and yacht America are distinct vessels. The Wanderer was once attached to the New York Yacht Club, subsequently engaged in the slave trade and was captured and condemned. 2. Cannot state the exact date. 3. The America has been in the United States naval school service, and is now owned by the United States Government. She competed for the Queen's Cup at Cowes, Eng., in a regatta "open to the world" in August, 1851. She won easily, distancing the fleet. She competed in the regatta of the New York Yacht Club on Monday, 8th inst. the Queen's Cup being the prize.

ANXIOUS, Honesdale, Pa.—1. Jem Ward beat G. Robinson, Bill Wall, G. Webb, J. Murray, M. Murphy, M. Hayes, Jno. Delany, D. Acton, Burke (brother to Woolwich Burke), Ned Baldwin, Rickers, Jemmy the Black, Sampson (three times), Tom Cannon, Jack Carter and Simon Byrne; was beaten by Josh Hudson and Pete Crawley, each time, in rounds; 30 minutes, Warwick, July 19, 1823. 2. He became champion in 1825. 3. We did, but cannot furnish back numbers containing reports of his battles.

HECTOR, Kansas City, Mo.—If the first ball pitched is an "unfair" ball, though it cannot be called, it can be counted as the first of two unfair balls which constitutes the "option" alluded to in the rule; also, if the first ball be within reach and over the base, though a strike cannot be called unless the batsman strikes at the ball, it will count somebody as one if the batsman has not necessary to constitute the repetition referred to. If a low ball is called for and a high one be delivered twice, then one ball should be called.

L. S. S., Evansville, Ind.—We always understood the matter as you do, but we have seen a ball thrown through the air in such a way as to make a curved line even against the wind. It is also a fact that Cummings' delivery is marked by a curve. Philosophy or no, the fact is as stated. How to account for it we know not. We have no reply to make to queries as to the respective skill or merits of players.

H. J. J., St. Louis.—1. The player failing to be on the base bag when touched out, of course. 2. A man being at 1st base when a fair ball is struck, and he failing to leave the base, if he be touched on the base before the striker is put out he is out. If the striker be put out first, the man on the base, if touched when on the base, is not out.

A. C., Baltimore.—1. There is no rule to compel C to deal from the entire pack, but it is irregular not to do so. 2. There is no special penalty of points for such exclamations, but no gentleman would ever such to guide his partner's play, and no remedy is to give such an one a wide berth in future. 3. The book is pretty good authority, but defective in many points.

NED, Phila.—Lady Thorn has tested as good a race as Goldsmith Maid. Indeed, her race might be strictly regarded as a better race than Goldsmith Maid's, for the Lady's time was on the first, second and fourth heats, which, if anything, is a better performance than the time of three successive heats. Your friend must pony up.

LEE, C., Augusta, Ga.—You do not state your case plainly; but, if we understand you rightly, your question is, whether the nine, having been to the field in the 8th innings, and being at the bat and leading the game, if the game be called, claim the game, and if the innings be complete when the game is called. The answer is—yes.

J. M. V., Minersville, Pa.—1. Dexter's time of 2:17¼ has never been beaten; Ethan Allen's best time is 2:28. 2. Flora Temple is still living near Philadelphia, and is in foal to Lexington. 3. Ethan Allen's time with running mate does not go on his trotting record.

SUBURB PLAYER, Philadelphia.—You having taken it up and declared to go alone, your adversary had no right to play it alone against you. The five tricks he made only gives him two points for the euchre. What kind of a hand had you to go alone on when you did not make a trick?

PET OF THE PUBLIC.—1. Keep in company as much as possible, take active physical exercise, and exert your will strongly against it. If this course does not give relief consult the best physician in your town and follow his advice implicitly. 2. Fanny Herring played in Harrisburg, Pa., August 29th, 30th and 31st, 1869.

Dr. WM. G., Bryan.—Never previous to July 30th, when Ned Searles cleared 13 feet 2 inches in a standing jump, spirit level, in a high wind, was the best jump prior to that date was 13 feet 10¼ inches, by the same man.

C. C. STEWART.—1. You can get the English and French papers through W. H. Smith & Son, 186 Strand, London. You can remit direct to the pub. or through the CLIPPER. 2. Not in the dramatic profession.

R. D. W., Philadelphia.—1. We shall publish a complete list of Simmons and Slocum's company prior to their opening. 2. John E. Owens will probably not appear in your city the next season. 3. J. H. Hackett is at his country seat.

PRENUTS, Portland, Me.—A special train, conveying the Duke of Wellington from Paddington to Slough, Eng., ran 18 miles in 18 minutes. The distance from Jaynesville to Chicago, 91 miles, was made in 90 minutes.

JUMPER, Washington, D. C.—1. Ned Searles made the best standing jump, viz.:—10 ft. 2 in. 2. The best 100 yard time is 9¾ seconds, by G. Seward; 200 yards, 19½ seconds, by both Weathall and Seward.

J. S., Cleveland, O.—Joe Coburn and Ed. Price fought a prize battle at Spy Pond, near Boston, Mass., May 14th, 1850, the fighting in a draw, after milling 3 hours and 20 minutes, during which 180 rounds were contested.

J. A. W., Sandy Hill.—1. George Palmer, 2:19¾; American Girl, 2:19; Lady Thorn, 2:18¼; Goldsmith Maid, 2:19¾. 2. Flatland, price, $2.50, can be obtained from E. James, Clipper Building, New York.

C. W., Alton.—3. If the cards have been regularly dealt, the last card must be turned for the trump. 2. Yes, why not? The misdeal did not occur in the deal when the Jack was turned up.

SAMPLE, Kalamazoo, Mich.—1. Send to E. James, Clipper Building, for Wood's Physical Exercises, price $2.50. 2. Flora Temple is at her owner's, Mr. Welch's place, at Chestnut Hill, near Philadelphia. 3. Her colts are too young to be trained yet.

TAURUS, Rockford, Ill.—News always welcome, but we do not issue the documents you refer to. 2. "Brevity is the soul of wit," you know.

C. W. Y., Rochester.—1. His entrance money is not returned under any circumstances. 2. See answer to J. A. W. 3. See their advertisements in New York Herald.

E. G., Lock Haven.—We have not been able to see him since the reception of your letter, and can't reply to your question until we do.

DELPHOSICO.—They have played six games together, of which the Athletics have won three and the Reds three. The Athletics won two in 1869, lost two in 1869 and each have won one in 1870.

A. W. Bergen, N. Y.—Jem Ward was champion from 1825 to 1828, inclusive. He was defeated by up with O'Neil. About three quarters of a mile from the start, Van Raden fouled a vessel at the bulk head of the dock, and as the tide swept his boat strongly against her hull, it was very difficult for him to get clear from her and get into the stream again. When he did get underway O'Neil had obtained a sufficient lead to ensure him the race and the belt. While the struggle was going on between O'Neil and Van Raden, the third competitor, Young, had withdrawn from the course, in consequence of an accident to his rowlock. The upper stake-boat was turned by O'Neil in ten minutes and thirty-three seconds from the start, Van's time being eleven minutes and forty-three seconds. The home-stretch pull requires no description, as O'Neil, with the race well in hand and assured, rowed home without any extra effort, reaching the goal in twenty-four minutes and forty seconds, Van Raden finishing thirty seconds later.

The second race, same distance and same style of boats, was participated in by Messrs. John T. Logan, John J. Bogart, Gregory O'Neil and C. B. Roof, who rank probably as the second rate oarsmen of the club. It was nearly 6 P. M. when this race was started and it proved a most exciting and interesting one, in consequence of the competitors being quite evenly matched. For a short distance Roof was in front, but Bogart passed him after two hundred yards had been pulled. Roof shortly after retired from the contest. Logan, who was rowing gamely, was now pressing Bogart very sharply for the first place, and the struggle between them for the turn at the mile and a half stake was by far the most exciting of the day, both reaching it and turning side by side. Soon after the turn Logan secured a short lead, but the race over the home-stretch was close work between them for its entire length, Logan proving the victor in 37:54; Bogart's time, 38:15. Gregory O'Neill did not complete the course. The prize in this race was a handsome gold badge. A tub race, for a gold badge, completed the day's pastime. The course was from the inside of the Elysian Fields dock—distance, 100 yards. Roof, Bogart and Logan started, and, after a race affording a great deal of merriment, Roof won the race and badge.

The steamboat, Fort Lee, conveyed the invited guests and friends over the course during the regatta, affording a highly select and fashionable assemblage of ladies and gentlemen a grand view of the afternoon's rowing. A significant compliment was paid the gallant Columbias by the unusual proportion of ladies on board of the steamboat, whose elegant toilettes were the subject of universal remark. Mr. Henry G. Hasbagen, president of the Columbia Club, assisted by an active committee, rendered the occasion a most enjoyable one to every participant. Judges—Messrs. Ransom Parker, Jr., Doctor Russel Withers and George B. Springsteen, the last named gentleman officiating also as timekeeper. Referee and starter—Mr. Charles S. Peverelly.

EXCITING SCULLING RACE.—The sculling race between Wm. Scharff, of the McKee Club, and Henry Best, of the Chambers Club, came off over the lower Monongahela course, Pittsburgh, on the 5th inst., and proved the most exciting race which has taken place upon those waters since Hamill and Brown rowed. Scharff was the favorite, and much money was speculated. The start was made at 5 o'clock P. M. Best held the lead for about three hundred yards, when he was passed and rapidly left in the lurch by Scharff, who won in 35:54; Best's time, 38:14. The distance rowed was considerably short of five miles. John Jones and John Carl were judges for Scharff, while Adam Trautman and Chas. Ditman officiated in like capacity for Best.

THE ANGLO-CANADIAN RACE.—A telegram from London, Eng., dated Aug. 6th, says:—"The four Tyne watermen selected to row against the St. John, N. B., oarsmen in the four-oared match at Lachine, near Montreal, have finished their training. The men are in fine condition. They will take out two new boats, which they have tried, and which prove satisfactory. They sail on Tuesday next from Glasgow to Montreal."

CAMBRIA VS. DAUNTLESS.—These rivals are to sail a match-race soon, outside of Sandy Hook, twenty miles to windward and return, according to the rules of the New York Yacht Club. The Cambria will also sail in a regatta with our schooners and sloops, for two cups, one for each class, given by Mr. Ashbury. If the Cambria wins she is to resign the prize to the second boat.

BASE BALL.

THE GRAND BENEFIT MATCH.

BROOKLYN DEFEATS NEW YORK.

The second and last of the series of games arranged in Brooklyn for the benefit of the family of the late Mr. Pigott, took place on the Union grounds, on Saturday, August 6th, in the presence of about 3,000 people, the affair being in every respect a creditable success. The first game, it will be remembered, was played on the Capitoline grounds between the Atlantic nine and a picked nine of the Stars, Eckfords, Alphas and Harmonics. The contestants in this second match were players from the Atlantics, Stars and Eckfords for Brooklyn, and the Mutuals, Unions and Actives from New York. The professional players who took part in these two matches included the whole of the Atlantic nine, Messrs. Hatfield, C. Mills, E. Mills and Eggler of the Mutual Club; Messrs. Allison, Duffy and Josh Snyder of the Eckfords, and Higham, Pabor, Holdsworth and Gedney of the Unions. The amateurs were Messrs. Jewell, Cummings, Beavens, Rogers and Worth of the Stars; J. Hall, Remsen and Valentine of the Alphas, Lewis of the Harmonics, and Walker of the Actives; in all, twenty professionals and ten amateurs. The Brooklyn Athletics were desirous of participating but were not allowed a chance. As these players have kindly volunteered their services in the cause of charity, and brought in quite a nice little sum of money has been raised for the widow, we suggest that a return match, "New York vs. Brooklyn," be played on the Capitoline grounds, in which the two nines shall be selected only from the above list of players, and that the proceeds be shared between the professional players who volunteered their services in the two games. There is a general desire to see such a game, and it would be no more than right that the liberality shown by the professionals be thus acknowledged. Should any amateurs take part in the game they can give their share as an additional contribution to the widow.

The feature of the contest was the playing of Ferguson as catcher to the pitching of Cummings. This combination, together with the fine support given the pitching, had a great deal to do with the result, as in fact, the Brooklyn nine was the strongest picked nine we have ever seen in a match since the the silver ball match of 1861, in which Pearce, Creighton, Pearsall, Smith, Price, Beach, Fianly, Manolt and Reach took part, these individuals three of the best players from each of the Atlantic, Excelsior and Eckford clubs, of Brooklyn. In that game Brooklyn defeated New York by 15 to 6. In this Brooklyn 14 to 6, the New York nine in 1861 included four Mutual players, three Gothams, one Eagle and one Jersey; viz.: McMahon, Brown, A. B. Taylor and Harris; Cohen, Van Cott and McKeever; Yates and Goldie. Van Cott and Goldie hot being able to play, Harry Wright, of the Knickerbocker and Culyer, of the Empire, were substituted. Oliver and Grum, too, were named to play in the Brooklyn nine, but the first named player in their stead. The catch on the bound was in vogue then, New York putting out 16 on the bound, and Brooklyn 6, these boyish catches being applauded to the echo by the crowds at that time, just as muffin home-run hits are now.

THE GAME.

"Play" was called at 3:30 P. M., with the New Yorkers at the bat, Hatfield being the first to face the music of Cummings' pitching. John opened play by popping up a high one, which fell into Start's hands, after which Eggler earned his base, but E. Mills sent a ball to Worth and retired. He was followed by Charley Walker, who hit safely and took his first. When Worth had caught out Mills, seeing Eggler returning to first base, he threw the ball in to Start, but rather wild, and the ball went by him and Eggler again started to get to second, but Ferguson played a nice point by duly backing up Start on the throw in from the field, and by this Eggler was kept on his base, otherwise he would have had his third on the overthrow. Every player in a nine should be on the qui vive in backing up other players, as it is the life of sharp fielding. As C. Mills gave Rogers a chance for a pretty catch, Walker was left at third base, the innings closing for one run scored and earned.

Brooklyn now took the bat, Pearce being the first striker, and he led off with a model hit over first baseman's head but short of the right fielder, thereby securing his first base with ease. Rogers, Duffy and Start, all three followed with hits which gave them their bases, Duffy getting two by his hit, Walker sending the balls in with but too fairly for the strikers, he not being in practice. All of the above strikers scored their runs, three passed balls assisting them, C. Mills finding the pitching less easy to attend to than Wolter's accurate delivery. The next three strikers were then put out in succession, Gedney making a running catch, Holdsworth taking a foul fly in good style, and Hatfield throwing out the third hand at first base. This closed the first innings with the lead in Brooklyn's hands by a score of 4 to 1, an advantage which almost secured them the victory at the outset. In the second innings New York earned two runs, owing to a couple of two base hits made by Pabor and Holdsworth, the latter eventually making the best display at the bat of the match. By a good hit of Worth's and a hot ball sent to Holdsworth by Smith which was well stopped, Brooklyn scored one run, Higham, Eggler and Gedney afterwards putting the side out. This was a slight pull up for New York, but the next two innings' play again gave the Brooklyn side a further gain, they adding 3 runs to their score, while the Yorkers were obliged to take a Chicago view of things; and as in the 5th innings each side scored 2 the tally at the close of the 5th innings left the totals at 10 to 5 in favor of Brooklyn. Thus far the game, though a little one-sided as regards the score, had nevertheless been marked by excellent play on both sides, the difference in the effectiveness of the pitching giving Brooklyn the principal advantage. In the 6th innings Brooklyn first disposed of their opponents for a single, and then ran up a score of 8, Duffy, Start and Ferguson hitting safely for their bases; the latter's hit obliging him to run his 120 yards. The last three innings saw the Yorkers kept in Chicago, and after Brooklyn had scored a single in the 7th innings by Smith and Pearce's good batting, they too visited the western city, the last innings closing with the totals at 14 to 6 in favor of Brooklyn. The game was sharply umpired by Mr. Wilder, the nine innings being played in an hour and a half. The ball used in the game was Peck & Snyder's new red dead ball, having but an ounce of rubber in it, and yet when it was hit properly it yielded the batsman a home run.

Of the play on the Brooklyn side we have to mention the fine catching of Ferguson, the excellent base play of Duffy and the fine catching of Rogers at left field, as the features of the fielding. But all did well, Cummings' fine pitching being admirably supported. On the part of New York, Hatfield's short fielding was a truly excellent display, E. Mills taking the lead on the bases and Gedney in the out-field. The prizes donated by Peck & Snyder were won by Smith and Holdsworth for the best batting record, and by Rogers and Gedney for the best fly catches. The proceeds of the game included $525 in receipts at the gate and $5 given by the little daughter of John Wilder. Below is the total amounts contributed to the fund for the benefit of Mrs. Pigott up to Aug. 6th:—

By proceeds of the match on Capitoline grounds	$113 45
By proceeds of the match on Union grounds	525 00
By contribution from Messrs. Weed and Decker	20 00
By contribution from Messrs. Chadwick, Kelly and Steele	45 00
By contribution from Miss May Wilder	5 00
By contribution from a Friend	2 55
Total	$710 45

Any others desirous of adding to the fund can do so by leaving the amounts at the CLIPPER office, care of Mr. Chadwick, of the Reporters' Committee. Five hundred dollars of the above amount has been placed in the Savings Bank, subject to the command of Mrs. Pigott.

We append the full score of the match:—

RED STOCKINGS vs. LIGHTFOOT.

The Lightfoots, of Lebanon, Ohio, visited Cincinnati on the 4th, and were kept busy scouring the field with their light feet. On the side of the Reds, Brainard did not play, Atwater pitching the first seven innings, H. Wright the eighth and McVey the ninth. Allison caught two innings, McVey six and Waterman one. The Lightfoots wear a "White Stocking" uniform. The score was as follows:—

THE TURF.

The Long Branch Inaugural Race Meeting.

FIRST DAY, SATURDAY, JULY 30TH.

A BRILLIANT OPENING—DELIGHTFUL WEATHER—SPLENDID RACING AND LARGE ATTENDANCE—LOBELIA WINS THE HURDLE RACE—ENQUIRER THE CONTINENTAL HOTEL STAKES AND HELMBOLD THE MONMOUTH STAKES.

The inauguration of the Long Branch Race Course at Monmouth Park, on Saturday, July 30th, was a brilliant success, and affords satisfactory assurance of the future prosperity of the new track. In our last issue we gave the summaries of the first day's sport, and now publish the details, preferring to have the particulars entire in one issue. The weather was glorious, for the cool breezes from the broad bosom of the Atlantic Ocean, but three miles distant, agreeably tempered the sun's warmth, and the racing was of the most exciting character, and the attendance comprised the representative beauty, fashion, wealth and intellect of every state in the Union. With such a formidable rival as Monmouth Park, Saratoga and Jerome Park will have to look out sharply to maintain their laurels as the most fashionable race courses in America, for it possesses advantages to both. It is much more easily reached than the former, and has none of that spirit of exclusiveness in its management which characterises Jerome Park, and which has done so much to mar its popularity with the public. The race course at Monmouth Park is confessedly the finest, safest, and will be in a short time one of the fastest in the country. The enclosure contains 127 acres, requiring two miles of high fencing; the track is exactly a mile in length, and is eighty feet wide in every part, and so admirably graded that every stride of the horses, from the start to the finish, is visible to the spectator. The grand stand is a magnificent structure, with seats to accommodate 7,000 persons. Three Mansard pavilions, capable of accommodating 250 people, rise above the steep French roof, and both the latter and the former are encased in variegated slates, laid in fantastic designs, which gives the entire structure a most architectural appearance. The view which it commands is charming in its loveliness; the blue and purple Jersey hills in the distance; the rich cultivated pastoral country spread out below, with waving crops of grain and corn, and dotted with white farm houses and villas nestling amid trees; and in another direction the broad Atlantic, with its surface glistening with the white sails of ships, unite in rendering the spectacle one of unsurpassed beauty. Mr. John Chamberlin, the gentleman to whose liberal spirit of enterprise Long Branch, New Jersey and New York are equally indebted for this new institution of racing enjoyment, is to be congratulated on the success which has attended the inauguration of the course. Facilities of access are not the least of its many advantages, for the New York and Philadelphia Railroad runs within two hundred yards of the grand stand, and close to the entrance to the course.

THE HURDLE RACE,

which commenced the day's sport, had four horses entered:—Oysterman, Jr., Bohannon, Lobelia and Morris. Welter weights were carried, Clem Alloway on Oysterman, Downing on Bohannon, Murphy on Lobelia, and Keays on Morris. The distance was two miles, over eight hurdles, the winner taking $700, the second horse $200, and the third $100. Oysterman was the favorite, the following being the current quotations just before the start:—Oysterman, $200; Lobelia, $185; Bohannon, $100; Morris, $30. The latter took the lead over the first hurdle, followed by Oysterman, Lobelia and Bohannon in the order named. At the second hurdle Morris still kept in front, being three lengths ahead of the second horse Oysterman, whose rider came on to his neck as he went over, but soon recovered his seat in the saddle. At the third hurdle Morris had still further increased his lead, with Oysterman still second, Lobelia third, and Bohannon last. Morris held his own over the fourth hurdle half way up the home-stretch, and led Bohannon, who had run into second place, two lengths, as the horses went under the string, Lobelia being third and Oysterman last. Bohannon gained rapidly on the next quarter, and was at Morris' quarters as the latter rose at the fifth hurdle, Lobelia being equally as close to Bohannon. Shaking off the latter on the back-stretch, Morris opened a gap of two lengths at the sixth hurdle, Lobelia and Oysterman still in their old positions. They took the seventh hurdle in the same relative order, and then a pretty struggle commenced, all four horses running in a cluster around the lower turn. The last hurdle was half way up the home-stretch, and Lobelia, out-running her opponents, cleared it a length in advance of Bohannon, with Oysterman third and Morris, who had been ridden to a standstill, last. A splendid race home between Bohannon and Lobelia resulted in favor of the old mare, who, retaining her lead to the finish, won a most interesting race by half a length, Oysterman third and Morris last. Time, 3:57.

THE CONTINENTAL HOTEL STAKES

was for three year olds exclusively, mile heats, the entrance being $50, play or pay, and a purse of $1,000 given by Mr. Borrows, the proprietor of the Continental Hotel, at Long Branch. There were twenty-seven starters and six runners, so that the stake was worth $2,100, nett, to the winner, the second horse receiving $200 out of the purse. The starters were Enquirer, Lynchburg, Maggie B. B., Harlo, Annie And and the Doncralle colt. Enquirer was the favorite, selling for $800, Maggie and Lynchburg for $500 each, and the field $100. Lynchburg won the first heat by a short head, after a brilliant finish with the Doncralle colt, whom he only caught in the last stride on the post, neither Enquirer nor Maggie B. B., going for the heat; time, 1:47. Still, Enquirer was freely backed to win against the field soon after the start for the second heat, and before the horses had gone two hundred yards Lynchburg was seen to falter and stop suddenly, and it was discovered that in changing his stride he had slipped and broken his near shoulder bone, which will prevent him ever running again. Enquirer, after going half a mile in company with Harlo, quitted her, and, galloping home, won the heat in a canter by two lengths from Maggie B. B.; time, 1:48. The third heat was won by Enquirer in 1:51¼, that winning the race, Maggie B. B., taking the $300, being second.

A feeling of sympathy for Major Bacon, the veteran owner of Lynchburgh, was general among the turfmen assembled, and Mr. Cameron turned it to practical account by commencing a subscription to compensate him, in some degree, for the heavy loss he had sustained by the accident to his promising Saratoga colt. Mr. Chamberlain headed it with $1,000, the Saratoga Association gave $800, Jerome Park $500, and a number of prominent turfmen, $100 each, so that in a short time $3,900 was raised, which will be increased to $5,000 in a day or two.

SECOND RACE.—Continental Hotel Stakes, for three year olds; subscription $50, play or pay; with $1,000 added; second to receive $1,000, $300 of which is second horse; the contribution of Wm. D. Borrows, Esq., proprietor of the Continental Hotel.

THE MONMOUTH STAKES

for horses of all ages, two miles and a half, had twenty-one subscribers at $50 each, p. p., with $1,500 added, of which $350 and $150 went to the second and third horses. Only three started—Mr. Babcock's Helmbold; Mr. Belmont's Glenelg, and Mr. Cameron's Invercauld. Helmbold, who had won the Westchester and Saratoga cups and other races, was so great a favorite that in one pool he sold for $5,500 against $1,000 for Invercauld, and $350 for Glenelg. It was no such odds on the favorite, for Glenelg challenged him so resolutely on the last quarter mile, that he collared him and for a moment Helmbold appeared beaten. But his rider freely applied both whip and spur, and the horse, gamely answering, came again, and beat Glenelg to the score by a short length, to the relief and delight of the layers of odds who had backed him. Time, 4:33¼.

THIRD RACE.—Monmouth Stakes, for all ages; subscription $30, play or pay; two and a half miles; purse, $1,500, of which $350 to the second, $150 to third horse.

SECOND DAY, TUESDAY, AUG. 2D.

MAJOR WINS THE MANSION HOUSE STAKES, GLENELG THE PURSE FOR ALL AGES, AND JUDGE CURTIS THE AMERICAN CLUB PURSE.

The weather continued most auspicious, and the attendance was larger than on the opening day. The racing was close and exciting, and afforded unbounded enjoyment to those who witnessed it. The Americus club, in their elegant new uniform, and companies A & B of the Twenty-second Regiment, were present by invitation.

THE MANSION HOUSE STAKES

was for three year olds, $50 each, play or pay, 24 subscribers, with $1,000 added by the proprietor of the above named hotel, which the second horse had $200, making the nett value of the stake to the winner $2,000. Four horses only came to the post:—Major, by Eugene; Cavalier, by Eclipse; Leland, by Lightning, and Susan Ann, by Lexington. Major, on the strength of his running a close second to Maggie B. B. in the Sequel Stakes at Saratoga, was made the favorite, Cavalier ranking next, with Leland third choice. In one pool sold just before the race, Major brought $500; Cavalier, $300; Leland, $210, and Susan Ann $15. The latter took the lead, with Cavalier next and Leland last, but before they had gone a quarter of a mile, Leland was in front, and, cutting out the running at a good pace, with Susan Ann close up, and the other two running side by side. Along the back-stretch Susan Ann took the lead from Leland and led him a length to the head of the home-stretch, where Leland drew even terms with her, and the pair ran lapped up the stretch and under the string two lengths before; Major, who was leading Cavalier three lengths on the first quarter of the second mile; Susan Ann again showed half a length in front of Leland, and they ran without change to near the half-mile pole, where Major closed up and got on even terms with the two leaders. Here Susan Ann's bolt was shot, and Leland and Leland carried on the struggle to the head of the stretch, where Leland began to quit, and Major galloped home a winner by three lengths; Cavalier beating Leland in the last hundred yards for second place. Time, 3:42¾.

SECOND DAY, AUG. 2D.—Mansion House Stakes, for three year olds; subscription $50, play or pay; two miles to carry 100 pounds. Purse, $1,000, of which sum $200 is to be given to the second horse; the contribution of Samuel Laird, proprietor of the Mansion House.

THE SECOND RACE

was for a purse of $700, for all ages, to carry 100 lbs, one mile and a half, had five runners:—Glenelg, 4 yrs., Legatee, 4 yrs.; R. B. Connolly, 6 yrs.; Erin, 4 yrs., and Boaster, 5 yrs. Mr. Belmont's colt was the favorite, bringing in pools $1,000; Connolly, $500; Boaster, $200, and Erin, $200. The favorite got badly off, being left over a dozen lengths behind; Boaster, Erin and Legatee being in the front as they turned the head of the stretch. The chances of Glenelg appeared completely out, and his backers felt sore and indignant at the wretched start he had got. As the horses passed under the string the first time Connolly led, with Boaster second, Legatee third, but all pretty close together, with Erin, the fourth, was several lengths behind, but not as far before Glenelg. Connolly and Boaster were lapped at the quarter pole, but the latter soon afterwards felt back, and Legatee took his place as second, and then increasing his pace, captured Connolly, and led him along the lower-stretch. The attention of the spectators was at this point directed to Glenelg, who was racing along at a terrific pace, and who, after successfully cutting down Erin, Boaster and Connolly, challenged Legatee for the lead at the head of the home-stretch. In a few strides he had him safe, and quitting him, galloped home the easiest of winners, with "hands down," three lengths ahead of Legatee, who beat Connolly ten lengths. Time, 2:37¾.

SAME DAY.—SECOND RACE.—Purse $700, for all ages, to carry 100 pounds. One and a half mile.

THE AMERICUS CLUB PURSE of $2,500, the contribution of that well known social organization, was the next race, and was for horses of all ages, mile heats, best three in five. This was a kind of contest once highly popular on the American turf, but now, in consequence of the innovation of dash races, in servile imitation of the English system, is now exceedingly rare, and indeed is only witnessed occasionally on some southern race course. The runners were Judge Curtis (formerly and better known as General Duke), Biddy Malone, Pompey Payne, Haric, Cruiskeen and Viley. The form shown by Judge Curtis at Saratoga caused him to be in most demand, and in pools he sold for $1,000 against $800 for Pompey Payne; $

HEAVY PUNISHMENT.

Old Master Brown brought his ferule down,
His face was angry and red—
"Anthony Blair, go sit you there,
Among the girls," he said.

So Anthony Blair, with a mortified air,
And his head hung down on his breast,
Went right away and sat all day
By the girl who loved him best.

A FORGIVING HUSBAND.

About two years ago there came to this city from C—— a gentleman by the name of R——; a lovely wife and two beautiful children—a little boy and girl, aged four and six respectively—accompanied him. Mrs. R—— was from one of the first families of the city named, and from childhood had been reared in the lap of luxury, but a few years after her marriage her husband sustained a severe loss in his mercantile affairs, and, as they failed to regain their former position and affluence, came to this city with a hope of bettering their condition. Soon after their arrival he was fortunate enough to obtain a position as surveyor on the line for a new railroad. His duties were such that he could not visit his family more than once in six weeks. On his first and second return all was as it should be—but that is, he saw nothing to arouse and love, but those smiles were was all goodness, all smiles and love, but those smiles were the smiles of deceit—her love that of a purjured woman. She had formed the acquaintance of a well to do man in this city possessed of means, and upon him was lavished all her love and attention. Anxious to change location for a short time, at least, and to spend a few weeks with her new found love, she placed her little one under the care of an old woman in the extreme eastern part of the city, and, with her paramour, set out for the east. A week later the husband returned, as was his custom, but found them gone, his once happy home deserted and desolate. Wretched and heart broken he wandered around the city for a time, and, giving all up as lost, returned with a sad heart to his business. Mr. R. came back to St. Joseph. One evening, a few weeks since, he stepped into an ice cream saloon, but he was scarcely seated when a lady in the other end of the room flew to him, and, throwing her arms about his neck, fell at his feet sobbing. "Oh! William! take me away, take me away." At last he had found his truant and unfaithful wife. He loved her too well to reproach her, and, taking her by the hand, led her out upon the street and back to her little home. The next morning he found his little darlings and brought them home, and the day following they left the city.—Pittsburgh Daily Dispatch, Aug. 3d.

A WIFE OUTRAGE IN THE PRESENCE OF HER HUSBAND.—We learn, through an officer having the matter in charge, that one of the most diabolical outrages ever perpetrated in this county has just came to light. The facts, as we learn them, are that a man in the town of Hillsdale, whose name we suppress for the present, for obvious reasons, was married a short time since, and at once the happy couple, in a scanty manner, proceeded to housekeeping with great expectations of the future. Their domestic affairs moved along swimmingly until a few evenings since, when they were aroused by two callers, who, it is said, are well known, but whose names as yet have not been made public. The husband donned his apparel and obeyed the summons to step outside the door, as the party calling was desirous of interviewing him upon important business. When outside he was quietly informed of the villainous intention of the two visitors, which was nothing less than to violate the person of her whom he had sworn to protect. He remonstrated with them, but their threats were accompanied by the presentation of a revolver to his head, with the alternative that, if he resisted or gave an alarm, they would blow his brains out and murder his wife. Not possessing the moral courage to face two such threats, he was compelled to submit, and each successively committed an outrageous assault upon the young wife. Having accomplished their atrocious errand, they began to realize the extent of their crime, which they attempted to cover up by threats of murdering the man and wife if the affair leaked out. It was their threats that kept the matter still in the neighborhood for some time, until by accident it came to the ears of the neighbors, who made it public. We understand the matter is under investigation by the proper authorities, and if true will be followed until the scoundrels get their just deserts.—Hudson Register, July 26th.

BRUTAL ASSAULT.—The heavy sentences lately imposed by the judges of our criminal court upon the fiends in human shape who have taken advantage of unprotected females seems to have but little effect, judging from the following outrage, which was committed on one of our most prominent ladies. On the evening of Thursday, the 14th inst., a gentleman doing business in the vicinity of Fourth and Chestnut streets took a stroll on South Broad street with his intended wife. They walked leisurely down that thoroughfare and passed the South Broad street park. On returning they noticed three fellows crouched upon the grass along the fence. On arriving opposite to these vagabonds the three sprang up, two taking hold of the gentleman and the third the lady. Within a few seconds there was an acquisition of four more ruffians, who turned their attention to the gentleman and he was driven off. The crowd then took the lady and dragged her across the fields to the coal oil refinery on the Point Breeze road, where a nameless outrage was perpetrated upon her. Her screams proved unavailing, and they only desisted when their lust was satisfied. Before leaving they forced her to disgorge her pocketbook, out of which they took all her money except seven cents, which they generously left her to pay her fare to the city with. She then reached Broad street, and, with the assistance of a gentleman who was driving, managed to reach the city. The next day she lodged complaint at the Central Station and gave a description of some of the ruffians. Three of them are now in custody and have been identified by the lady. One of them has confessed the part he took in the affair and has given information on which the remaining four will be captured.—Philadelphia Evening Telegraph, July 23d.

ANOTHER OUTRAGE.—Again we are called upon to record another outrage upon the person of a respectable married lady, at Point Airy, a mere mention of which is all that the public has hitherto obtained. The lady in question, whose name it is not wise to make public, was at Point Airy on the morning of the 1st of July last, with her children. In the afternoon she had occasion to return for the purpose of recovering some article which she had mislaid while there in the morning. She was walking along the wharf at the upper end of the island when she was assaulted by Jacob Hagrue, who was up at the Central yesterday, and is as ill looking a fellow as the city can produce. She was thrown down and her person outraged. Three men who were passing at the time, and whom she called to her assistance, refused to come near the place, but encouraged the brutal assailant in his fiendish purpose. The victim cried murder several times with a loud voice, but did not succeed in attracting the notice of any one. This testimony was given by the outraged lady at the hearing, and a severe cross examination could not make her swerve from the facts of the statement. Other corroborative evidence was adduced, and the accused was committed to answer the charge at court.—Philadelphia Press, July 26th.

A SINGULAR PROTEST.—The following singular protest is from the Boston Herald, of July 27th, and may be read with interest:—

BOSTON, July 25th, 1870.

EDITOR OF THE HERALD.—I sometimes, but not often, notice that a female has something to say in your column for the people, and therefore take the liberty of saying a few words, with your kind permission. I wish to remonstrate, in behalf of my sex, against the publishment in the papers of such an article as I read in the Boston Post, in relation to the marriage of Mr. Butler's daughter, and a description of her night dresses and underclothing. How any man could have written that article, unless some female gave him the information, passes my understanding; and how any respectable female, as I suppose Miss Butler considers herself, can suffer any man to fumble her underclothing in the manner it must have been done, and describe to him all the particulars of the manner in which they were trimmed, is more than I can understand, with my limited view of human nature. I suppose it is all right, but they did not formerly do such things. It would once have been considered very immodest to show a gentleman into the bridal chamber, and let him examine the quilts and sheets, and describe to the public how they were marked; but I suppose we must put up with this new order of things, and make the best of it; but of one thing I am certain, I never will be married if I live to be as old as Methuselah, if I have to do anything of the sort.

SUSAN.

DR. LIVINGSTONE A MATRIMONIAL PRISONER.—A SINGULAR STORY.—A Detroit lady now sojourning in Syria writes home that she has made the acquaintance of the celebrated traveler, Burton, now British Consul at Damascus, and from him obtains a new explanation of the Livingstone mystery. He says the doctor's recent stay of two years or thereabouts, like all other troubles, had a woman at the bottom of it. He was first persuaded, much against his wish, to marry a rude and blustering native princess, and when he afterwards proposed to leave Mrs. Livingstone, in order to prosecute still further his topographical investigations, his fond father-in-law and mother-in-law interposed such strong objections that he was actually kept a prisoner, and thus it happened that the honeymoon was so outrageously prolonged. The captain says the reason this fact has never been made public is that the doctor's friends, feeling outraged by the transaction, have succeeded until recently in keeping it a secret. Capt. Burton himself married the handsomest woman in England, so that he can hardly be moved with envy towards his fellow traveler, and, as he speaks fourteen different languages, his capacity for telling the truth would be considerable.

ALLEGED OUTRAGE ON A YOUNG GIRL.—Last Sunday evening a man named Henry Peterson, who is about forty-two years of age and resides on Commercial street, enticed a young girl about thirteen years of age to accompany him to Brighton for the purpose of "gathering blackberries." After a good deal of persuasion she consented, and off they went to the blackberry patch. Once there, Peterson began to make known his real object. After saying a few words to the girl, as she alleges, he seized her round the waist, threw her to the ground and partially accomplished his purpose. The little girl on her return home made known to her friends what had taken place, and yesterday afternoon officer Geo. W. Frost, of the Harbor Police, succeeded in arresting Peterson, and this morning, in company with the girl, the officer went to Brighton in order that a proper complaint might be made out against Peterson, he, in the meantime, remaining in custody at the Harbor Station. Further particulars will be developed at his examination, which will, probably, take place to-morrow.—Boston Herald, Aug. 3d.

TARRED AND FEATHERED.—The village of Cortlandville, N. Y., was recently disturbed by a party of young men who essayed to avenge the death of Mrs. Christopher H. Moore, who cast herself into the river near that village on Tuesday night and was drowned. It appeared on the coroner's inquest that Mrs. Moore's husband had been improperly intimate with a depraved woman living in the village named Melissa Blye, and the verdict of the jury was that a knowledge of such intimacy had rendered Mrs. Moore insane, and while in such mental condition she had committed suicide. A strong feeling of indignation arose against the woman, and a party of young men forced the doors of her house and subjected her to a treatment of tar and feathers. She was first dragged to the street, where a promiscuous crowd of about two hundred had gathered, and there entirely disrobed. In this condition she was taken through the streets to another part of the village, where tar and feathers were applied. She was then suffered to go her way and the crowd dispersed. While this outrage was going on she begged of some members of the party to spare her life, and appealed to them as friends who had also known her intimately. The citizens are indignant at these outrages.

A NUDE EXHIBITION.—About ten o'clock to-day pedestrians on the Common were regaled, shocked and amused, according to their respective tastes, by a rare exhibition on the Common. Among those who were out to-day enjoying the beauties of nature and arts as displayed in Boston's breathing place was John Murphy, an elderly cove, with sunburnt skin and grizzly hair and whiskers. At hour named he stood contemplating the artistic symmetry of the Brewer fountain, and, after a few moments, envying the comfortable position of Neptune, Galatea and the other personages who sit beneath the dripping waters, he proceeded to emulate their example. Without any great fuss he shuffled off his dry goods, every rag of them, and boldly plunged into the cooling waters of the basin, where he was disporting himself with great freedom and without a blush, he had not long indulged, however, when Officer Baker, of the Fifth police, happening along, soon fished him out and took him to the Second station. There it appeared that John was non compos mentis, and he was turned over to the officers who attend to that class of unfortunates.—Boston Herald, Aug. 5.

A SHOOTING CASE.—It is thought that Joseph Mooney, who was shot in the breast by his mistress on Friday, July 29th, at a house of ill fame in Manchester, N. H., will not recover. The girl, Birtie Milford, who fired the shot, is under arrest, awaiting the result of Mooney's wound. Mooney has lately been a barkeeper at Bowdoin Hall, in Beston, Mass., and a few days before he went to Manchester he received a letter from the girl threatening his life unless he was more faithful to her.

BASE BALL.

PASTIMES vs. HAYMAKERS.

The Pastime Club, of Baltimore, after their victory over the champion Stars, of Brooklyn, on Saturday, July 30th, left town for Troy, and on Monday, Aug. 1st, they played the Haymakers on the latter's grounds. The Pastimes, on their arrival in the morning, were taken in charge by the reception committee of the Haymakers and escorted to the Mansion House, where a substantial repast awaited them. In the interval between their arrival and the time announced for playing the game the visitors were shown the local elephants of the city. Promptly at the time appointed the Pastimes appeared upon the grounds and were greeted with loud applause. About six hundred persons were on the ground, the equally appearance of the sky doubtless preventing many from attending. Those who did attend witnessed one of the prettiest games of ball ever played upon the Union grounds. The result was very unexpected, the general opinion being that the Haymakers would easily get away with the "Ponies" and beat that they would beat the visitors by five and ten runs, and also make more in five and six innings than the Pastimes would in nine, were freely offered, though with but few takers, as there is no betting crowd connected with the amateur Pastimes. The visitors won the toss and sent the Haymakers to the bat. The game opened well and promising for a close score. In the first two innings the Haymakers scored 2 and the visitors 2. The Trojans were "Chicagoed" in the next five innings and the Pastimes added 10 runs to their score, giving them a lead of that number and ensuring them the game. In the last two innings the Haymakers added 4 to their score and the Pastimes 2, the totals standing at the conclusion of the game 23 to 6 in favor of the Pastimes. The fielding of both nines was good, but at the bat the Haymakers were decidedly weak, while the Pastimes were heavy and generally safe, it being the best exhibit of skill at the bat they have shown this year, while it was about the poorest the Haymakers have made. It is not necessary to go into details of the game, as there is but one thing to say, and that is that the Haymakers were out-batted and out-fielded by their opponents, and, therefore, another "sure thing" was not quite so sure as it might have been. The following is the score of outs, runs and total put out, the score of bases on hits not having been kept:—

UNION vs. PASTIME.

This was one of the most noteworthy triumphs ever achieved by the Pastimes, and they were of course greatly elated with their victory. On Tuesday, August 2d, the Baltimoreans arrived in town again, and the same afternoon they visited the Union Base Ball park at Tremont, to play their return game with the Unions. Before the game was commenced there was quite a dispute about the right to furnish the ball, the Pastimes insisting upon furnishing the red dead ball of Peck & Snyder, and the Unions being equally bent upon playing with their ball, the new Van Horn dead ball, which has a quarter of an ounce less of rubber in it than Peck's red. As far as the game was concerned, it was a matter of little importance which was played, as both were medium balls; but the Pastimes claimed their right to supply theirs on the basis of the nation being the first to play there, while the Unions insisted on their right to present theirs on the grounds that the game was the return match. For about fifteen minutes there was a lively little discussion between Messrs. Kielhaltz and Lush, the respective representatives of the two clubs, and at one time the Pastimes were told to take up bats and leave the ground, as there would be no game. As this involved the return of gate money, a council was held, and it was finally resolved to yield the point to the Pastimes. This being done, the Pastimes withdrew their objection like gentlemen, and so the Van Horn ball was played with.

The game did not commence until 4 P. M., at which time the Unions went to the bat, Higham opening play with a three base hit, thus showing that the ball was lively enough when hit in the right manner. Before he could get in, however, two men were put out, Shelley's two base hit, after Bearman and Bailey had been put out, scoring Higham home. By a fine play of Poppiein's to Lucas the third man was retired before Shelly could score, the innings closing for one run well earned. The Pastimes were then sent to Chicago in good style, as were the Unions in their second innings; but the Pastimes now began to do something in the scoring line, Williams, Lucas, Southard, Poppiein and McDonald sending the ball hot to the field, though, by the very sharp play of Holdsworth and Kenny, two of them fell victims to Higham at second base. Three runs, however, were scored before the side was put out, the close of the innings leaving the lead in the hands of the Pastimes. In the third innings, too, the Baltimoreans still further improved their position by again whitewashing the Morrisanians, and adding one earned run to their own score, the tally of the third innings leaving the totals at 4 to 1 in favor of the Pastimes. The boys now began to feel exultant; the game was young yet the Unions felt equally confident, and, as the result of the three following innings' play was to add no less than eight runs to the Union's score, while the Pastimes were detained in Chicago, things at the close of the 6th innings began to look a little "mixed" for the Baltimore boys, and they did not feel quite so confident.

In these innings errors by Southard, Chenowith, Livingston, Poppiein and Buck helped the Unions to five runs, while on the other side, but one Higham missed three foul balls, a fine double play by Kenney, Birdsall and Bearman made up for it, Holdsworth also doing service in his position. In the third innings Birdsall went to short field, owing to his inability to throw from his old position to 2d, Higham playing behind. In the 7th innings the Unions were splendidly "Chicagoed," Williams and Poppiein making a fine play together, and by good batting, after chances for outs had been lost by Kenney and Higham, the Pastimes rallied to the tune of four, thereby tieing the score. The game now began to be decidedly interesting. In the 8th innings the first striker on the Union side got his base by an error of Southard's, but it was offset afterwards by a double play made on a splendidly taken foul fly sharp from the bat by Williams, the ball being sent to pitcher and thence to first base in turn, in time for the retirement of Reynolds, who had just earned his base, and, though Gedney afterwards got his base on a fine catch off Higham's bat by Chenowith, ended the innings, the only player who scored his run being the one who made his base by an error. On the other side the Pastimes earned their run, and therefore the ninth innings was commenced as the eighth had been with a tie score, the totals being now 10 to 10.

The last innings was now commenced and Bearman was at the bat. Very foolishly the three out-fielders were allowed to stand out too far, and the result was that Bearman's ball fell safe at centre field; and, when Pabor came to the bat and sent a ball for Bailey to take, that player had to run in so far that he dropped it, and before a run was scored Buck had a chance for a catch which he failed to accept, and the result was three men had lives given them. Afterwards, though no less than eight players went to the bat in this inning, only two runs were scored, Williams and Poppiein putting the side out in fine style. The Pastimes now went in to try to win, but, though they had but three runs to get to do it, they failed to secure even a single base, and the game therefore ended in favor of the Unions by the totals of 12 to 10. The boys failed to play with the nerve shown in the two previous games, or they would have won this game, as Birdsall, not being able to play behind, weakened the Unions. The umpire discharged his duties acceptably. We append the score:—

MUTUAL vs. PASTIME.

The contest between these clubs on Aug. 3d did not prove to be as good as expected, the Pastimes failing to play up to their mark. Southard proved to be the weak man of the nine in this game, and some of the others indulged in poor throwing. The Mutuals played well in the opening innings, but afterwards took things easy. The Pastimes left town the same night for home. During their stay in this city they have not only shown themselves to be expert players, but gentlemen both on and off the field, and have left a very favorable impression. Since leaving Baltimore they have played six games, losing three and winning three. The total scores were 74 to 90 against them. Their best fielding game was with the Stars, and their best batting display was made at Troy. Their poorest game was that with the Mutuals. We learn that the Stars have decided to play their third game at Baltimore, as they were much pleased with their treatment in that city. We give the score of the match below:—

THE RED BALL.—The new ball manufactured by Messrs. Peck & Snyder is rapidly coming into general use by prominent clubs, its dark color—red—being one of its greatest recommendations. The weight of rubber used in this ball varies from an ounce to an ounce and a half, but in future all of this brand will be made with but an ounce. Every club that has used them speak in the highest terms of the ball. See advertisement for prices, etc.

ATHLETIC vs. KEEKONGAH.—The Athletics played a lively ball game at Fort Wayne, Ind., July 30th, to the following tune:—

Keekongah.	1st	2d	3d	4th	5th	6th	7th	8th	9th
Athletic	1	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	—1

It was a tedious contest, and the batting was unworthy of a first class nine.

MUTUAL vs. ECKFORD.

On Tuesday, Aug. 2d, the Mutual Club played their first game on their home field since their return from their tour west, their opponents being the Eckford nine. It will be remembered that the Mutuals left town July 16th, since which time, up to July 31st, they played the following matches:—

July 18—Mutual vs. Maryland, Baltimore	21 10
July 19—Mutual vs. Pastime, Baltimore	34 18

July 26—Mutual vs. Forest City, Cleveland	5 7
July 30—Mutual vs. Cincinnati	12 15
Totals	302 120

Up to the 1st inst. they won 29 games and have lost 7, with two tie games. The clubs defeating them have been the Star, 14 to 3; Union, 19 to 15; Atlantic, 15 to 13; Harvard, 24 to 23; Athletic, 24 to 15; Cincinnati, 15 to 13, and Forest City, of Cleveland, 7 to 5.

The game of Tuesday, the 2d inst., was well played in some respects, but not quite up to the mark anticipated. The Mutuals opened with the lead, and maintained their vantage ground to the close. We give the score below:—

HARVARD vs. INDIANAPOLIS.

One of the largest assemblages that ever gathered on the Fair grounds to witness a base ball match greeted the Harvards on the 30th ult. For several weeks prior to the game there had been much interest manifested in the result; the rapid improvement of the Indianapolis youths, and the marked superiority of their play, warranted the belief that they would give the Collegians a close fight for victory. But base ball is very uncertain, and such it proved to be, says the Sentinel. "Our boys, who had shown remarkable nerve in the Logansport game two days before, were more remarkable for the want of nerve they displayed in their contest with the Harvards. They seemed to regard the Collegians as nine anacondas, who were threatening to devour them whole, and in the field, as well as at the bat, their nerve forsook them and they played like men with fever and ague. Their unsteady hands refused to hold the ball, and the Collegians had an easy thing of it up to the sixth innings, when, for the first time during the game, the 1's seemed to realize their foolishness in being so unsteady and nervous, and set to work with a will that showed what they could do when settled down to it. From this point the game was splendidly contested, notwithstanding the great difference in the score—33 to 2. The score:—

UNION, OF MORRISANIA vs. WARREN, JR., OF NEW YORK.

The Warren, Jr., of New York, being a very ambitious organization, managed to get on a practice game with the Unions, of Morrisania, on Aug. 3d, and, although the game opened badly against them, they, by really good batting and fielding, managed to turn the scales in their favor and vanquished the ex-champions by a score of 18 to 17. UNION, OF MORRISANIA, vs. RESOLUTE, OF ELIZABETH.

On Monday, Aug. 1st, the Union nine, of Morrisania, went over to Jersey to see how things looked down Waverly way, and on their arrival at the Fair grounds they were met by the Resolutes, and the result was a trial of skill on the field. Despite the lessons the Elizabeth boys have had, showing the folly of playing with a lively ball, they would play with one in this game, and the result was their signal defeat by the heavy batting nine of the Unions. At first the contest was close, but soon the Unions began to hit the elastic ball all over the field. The full score below gives all the particulars of the play. As the Unions insisted upon playing Bearman the game becomes one forfeited to the Resolutes by a score of 9 to 0. Score:—

MARYLANDS vs. RED STOCKINGS.

The Marylands played the Red Stockings in Cincinnati, on the 2d, and while the game resulted in an easy victory for the western boys, it was marked by some pretty play on both sides, though Kohler made several muffs in centre field. Brainard took a rest on the Cincinnati side, and Atwater took his place as pitcher, Harry Wright pitching in the last two innings. Allison caught three innings and McVey the rest of the game. George Wright did some superb batting, making no less than three home runs. He has recovered from his late lameness. McVey also made a homer on a heavy crack to centre. The game opened very prettily with a blank score on each side, followed by a run of three for each, and then two more whitewashes, the score thus being tied up to the fifth innings. In the last five innings, however, the Cincinnatis batted cleanly and heavily for 22 runs, while they only allowed the visitors to add six to their score. It is proper to add that the Marylands were short Worthington and Hooper, of their regular nine. Leonard marked his fielding by four fine flies, three of which were difficult flies. The following is the score:—

CHAMPIONSHIP SWIMMING MATCH.

WHYTE DEFEATS COULTER.

London bridge seldom, if ever, presented such a scene of excitement at 7 o'clock in the morning as on July 18th, when H. Coulter and C. Whyte contended for £25 a side and the title of champion swimmer of the Thames, London bridge being the starting point and the clock of Greenwich Hospital the goal.

HISTORY OF THE MEN.

HENRY B. COULTER is 23 years of age, stands 5ft 7in and scales 138lbs. He commenced his swimming career in 1861, when he won a silver medal for a race, open to all comers. On the 1st July, 1865, he was matched with J. F. Jones, the "Bermondsey Dolphin," whom he beat, and in the same season carried off another medal as the winner of a race in the Serpentine. In 1865 he swam second to Harry Gurr for the Sir William Fraser Gold Medal. The Serpentine Club, of which he is a member, gave a valuable prize for their captaincy race, which Coulter won, and he had the honor of winning a similar race each season, until T. Morris broke the spell by defeating him. In 1866 he won the Sir William Fraser Gold Medal, beating D. Pamplin and several others. Coulter was less fortunate in 1868, for in a 1,000 yards match in the Serpentine, for £25 a side, Harry Gurr beat him, but only by a yard. In July of the next year he was also beaten by D. Pamplin, in a match to swim 1,000 yards of the Serpentine, for £25 a side, Pamplin winning by six yards, after a well-contested race. In the following month he was more fortunate, as he defeated Isaac Condy, of Sheerness, in a match to swim from Sheerness Garrison Point to the Nore Light, for £100. Since then he has won a vast number of minor prizes, and a few weeks since defeated Pamplin in a breast swimming match at the City of London Baths. For the match under notice he trained in his neighborhood of Kensal Green, in company with his brother William. His colors had a blue border and spots on a white ground.

CHARLES WHYTE has gained a large number of cups and medals—some of them for saving life—in fact, so numerous are his performances that we cannot spare the space to enumerate. His principal achievement, however, was swimming second for the gold medal presented by the London Swimming Club, for a long distance race in the Thames, on Sept. 16, 1865. In that race he exhibited such gameness, combined with speed, that he readily found friends to back him against Ephraim Goodwin, by whom he was beaten, but not until after a severe race for a greater part of the distance. Whyte was taken out of the water just before reaching Hungerford, and his opponent finished leisurely in 1h. 12m. 20s. Smarting under his defeat, he challenged Goodwin to a race over the same course for £20 and the Five Mile Championship. The match took place on Aug. 22, 1866, and Whyte won easily by 38 seconds. Since then Whyte has been steadily pursuing his profession as a teacher of swimming at the King street Baths, Camden Town. He took his breathings in the neighborhood of Regent's Park, and was in excellent trim, considering that he is now approaching the sere and yellow leaf as an athlete, having completed his 34th year on the 31st of last July. In swimming costume he stands 5ft. 6¾in., and scaled on the day 141lbs. His flag consisted of a white ground silk neckerchief, with a neat scarlet border.

Seven o'clock was the hour named in the articles for the start, but it was 26 minutes past when the competitors made their appearance on the bows of the Falcon steamboat (Capt. Jas. Swaisland), which was well filled with spectators. As they stepped on the diving board they were loudly cheered by the multitudes who covered the bridge, the shipping and in fact every spot that commanded a view of the start, whilst the river was thickly studded with small craft, most of which were as full as they could be consistently with the safety of their occupants. Although Whyte certainly looked in the best condition, 6 to 4 was freely offered on Coulter, who laid his opponent 3 to 2 and a crown (25s.) before starting, but ere they had gone a mile it veered round to 6 to 4 on Whyte. W. Stone was umpire for Whyte and a friend officiated for Coulter. With some little difficulty a space was cleared in front of the steamer by the Thames Police, and at 7.38.26 Mr. H. Woodstock, the referee, gave the signal and the men dived simultaneously.

THE RACE.

Coulter first rose to the surface and held the lead for about 20 yards, when Whyte shot past him and led at a tremendous pace for the first quarter of a mile; Coulter then, by a well timed spurt, drew in front amidst the most tumultuous cheering, and thus early gave indications of the brilliant struggle that was to ensue. Whyte, however, would not let him have any rest, and at half a mile again resumed the lead, each evidently trying to race the other down, Whyte, to the surprise even of his warmest admirers, seeming to show fully as much speed as his opponent. A hundred yards further on Coulter again dashed to the fore and showed the way by a hard until the first mile had been completed, this portion of the distance having been swum in the unprecedented time of eleven minutes and fifty-three seconds! Nearing Cherry Garden Pier the Camden Town representative, urged on by his partisans' cheering, showed slightly in front, but was soon forced to give way to Coulter, who, coming with a long, swinging side stroke, led at a mile and a half by three yards. Time, 17min 13 sec. Continuing to swim on his left side, Coulter had increased his lead at the entrance to the Surrey Canal Docks to five yards. The Champion now began to decrease the gap, and at two miles Coulter was only a couple of yards in advance. Time, twenty-three minutes and twenty-six seconds—an unparalleled performance. Off the King and Queen Dockyard, about a hundred yards farther on, Whyte gave his opponent the slip, but was almost immediately repassed by the Paddingtonian. Rounding the point by Canada Wharf, owing to the grand steering of Whyte's two pilots, Mr. Nat Rolles and Dan Gilham, the Camden town man soon got into the full strength of the tide, and showed with a clear lead. By a desperate effort Coulter drew level with his antagonist at three miles, in the marvellous time of thirty-five minutes twenty-eight seconds! In a few more strokes the Paddington man again took the premier position, and, passing the East India Railway Depot, led by two yards, this being the greatest advantage Coulter ever gained. Coulter's friends were now in ecstasies, but their hopes were soon blighted, for Whyte, through admirable steering, reached the Commercial Dock Pier a yard in advance. Time, 49min. 55sec. Gradually increasing his advantage, despite the gallant efforts of his opponent, the Champion completed the fourth mile in forty-eight minutes nineteen seconds, leading by three yards. The tremendous pace at which the competitors had been swimming now began to tell in the inevitable sale, added to which the police, who had accompanied the race thus far, turned back, and the occupants of the small craft behaved in a disgraceful manner, not only hampering the men but entirely obscuring them from the view of the referee, who would probably have been unable to decide if any foul mishap had occurred, were it not for the kindness of Messrs. H. and D. Bedford, the well-known amateur swimmers, who quickly conveyed him in a small boat alongside the men. A ludicrous incident occurred here, as some fellow, who had plunged into the water an enormous distance ahead of the competitors about a mile previously, was passed by the competitors, and immediately afterwards taken into a friendly boat, many of the spectators on shore imagining it was one of the contestants. They were, however, soon undeceived, as a brilliant struggle now ensued, and they passed Millwall Pier nearly abreast. Time, 69min. 58sec. The fine staying powers of Whyte now proved of service to him, as, passing Messrs. Peun's works, he drew rapidly away from his game antagonist, and for the first time during this magnificent contest held a decided lead of 10 yards, while at Pontifex's he had increased it to a dozen. Just before reaching the Dreadnought Hospital ship Whyte turned to look at his opponent, who thereupon made a desperate effort and decreased the gap several yards. Charley, now swimming as strongly as ever, made his final burst, and went past the goal champion of the Thames nearly 30 yards in advance of Coulter, who was dreadfully exhausted, and would have fainted had it not been for opportune assistance. Time, one hour, four minutes and twenty-three seconds! Coulter afterwards challenged Whyte to swim again over the same course for £50 or £100 pounds a side, but the latter declined, stating that his pupils were increasing in number so rapidly that he could not take the time necessary to train for such an arduous undertaking. He resigns the title in favor of Coulter.

SAVANNAH REGATTA.

On July 27th the Shell Road, leading from Savannah to the Thunderbolt river, was crowded with carriages of all descriptions, well freighted with humanity en route to witness the aquatic contest which came off on that date under the auspices of the Savannah Regatta Association. The prizes offered were:—First prize for first-class boats—silver egg stand. Second prize for next best boats of first-class—silver pitcher and tray. First prize for second-class boats—silver butter stand. The following boats entered to compete for the prizes under the rules of the Association:

FIRST CLASS.

Hope—A. W. Clark	Isle of Hope.
Minnie—Ludlow Cohen	Thunderbolt.
Georgia—Wm. T. Daniels	Greenwich.
Duchesse Josianne—J. M. Chisholm	Savannah.
May Forrest—T. W. McNish	Savannah.
Lulie

SECOND CLASS.

Tallulah
Marsh Hen—Col. Bonaud
Sunny Side—J. H. Monahan

At 4 o'clock the yachts, all being ready, left the starting point to contest for the prize over a 7 mile course, and the start was all that could have been expected in the absence of wind, the Duchesse Josianne getting away first, and from the start to the finish keeping the lead. Of the number that started but four returned according to the stipulations to report at the starting point. The Georgia capsized on her way out to the rounding buoy, and the Hope, yielding her desire to win the prize, rescued the immersed crew and towed them and their disabled ship back to the judges' stand. The betting was strongly in favor of the Georgia, and it is confidently believed that she would have carried off the trophy of victory had no mishap befallen her, but luck being against her the knowing ones lost their money.

Upon the conclusion of the race the crews of the various boats were invited to the residence of Mr. Bellissario, where the prizes were presented by Mr. Haywood, who congratulated the victors in appropriate language. The following official report tells the rest of the story:—

THE AMATEUR CHAMPIONSHIP OF THE THAMES.—The final heat for the Wingfield Sculls—the possession of which is supposed to invest the holder with the amateur championship of the Thames—was decided on the 20th of July, the competitors being J. Ross, of the West of Scotland Amateur Boat Club, and Chas. Long, of the London Rowing Club, the holder of the trophy from last year. Shortly after half past six the competitors took up their stations a little above the aqueduct, Long, having won the toss, selecting the Middlesex berth, and the two were dismissed on level terms at the first attempt by Mr. Searle, who, as usual, officiated as starter. Immediately the signal was given Ross dashed away at a tremendous pace, and, leaving his opponent with every stroke, showed with a clear lead midway between the Star and Garter and Simmonds' yard. Continuing to force the pace in the same astounding manner, he drew away foot by foot, and at Bishop's creek led by fully two lengths, which he increased to three at the Point. Here, however, the severity of his exertions began to tell upon the Clyde man, and Long, without any perceptible increase of effort, came up with him hand over hand, overlapping him by upwards of half a length as they commenced to make the crossing. Directly he was collared the Scotchman, to the astonishment of the spectators, shut up dead, and ceased rowing, leaving his opponent to paddle the remainder of the distance at his leisure. As soon as he had recovered himself Ross rowed on and completed the course, reaching the ship at Mortlake several minutes after Long. The winner was shown up by F. S. Gulston, the captain of the London Rowing Club, in the club twelve-oar, and George Drewitt piloted Ross. E. D. Brickwood officiated as umpire.

DOUBLE SCULL RACE.—On the afternoon of July 30th the city wharf at Louisville, Ky., was thronged with people to witness a double scull race between the Carrie, manned by Nat Stinson and Wm. Williams, and the Morris McDonald, rowed by Louis Mulholland and Fred. Wolf. It was for a stake of $1,000, over the Louisville course. The distance was three miles, and the race was won by the Carrie by two boats' lengths. After they were seated in their boats a practice of a few moments was allowed, when the umpire, Capt. Jas. Dougherty, who was at the three mile stake, announced by signal that all was ready; the boats took their place in line, and at the signal a fair start was made. After the boats reached Second street the contest began to grow warm among the friends of the parties on shore, and bets were freely offered and as freely taken. At the foot of Floyd street the friends of the Carrie were very enthusiastic, as the men seemed to be holding out better, and the strokes were so even that they could not think of giving up the belief that the Carrie would win, and they offered to raise their bets three to one. The wagers ranged from a nickle to $100 by interested steamboatmen, and it is thought that fully $10,000 changed hands during the race. As the boats neared the goal it was hard to tell which was ahead, but when the Carrie began to make the curve it was plainly seen that she was two lengths to the fore. The time was 25 minutes 15 seconds.

SCULLING RACE.—On the 4th of July a match was made between John O'Neil and Patrick Harrington, alias "Paudeen," three miles on the Connecticut river, at Springfield, Mass., for $100 a side. Harrington had previously won several races, but the reputation of the boat, by O'Neil, as a wherry puller, caused his friends to be somewhat shy of investing their "scads." Another cause of this was the fact that Pat had a bad arm, the effect of a wound received while in the army. They got in line, Harrington, who had the outside, rowing a boat made like a wherry, but having a flat bottom. O'Niel rowed in one of Elliott's best wherries. After one false start they got away in good shape, Harrington drawing away from his man in style, taking 36 strokes a minute to O'Niel's 30. Harrington came home in twenty-four minutes and twelve seconds, O'Neil drawing out.

A DOUBLE SCULL RACE, two miles, for $100 a side came off on the Charles river on July 30th, S. D. Salmon, Jr., and A. C. Pike rowing against C. V. Benton and Arthur Wellington. The former pair won in 15:25.

CRUISE OF THE NEW YORK YACHT CLUB.—The appended circular, relative to the annual cruise of the vessels belonging to the New York Yacht Club, has been issued:—

OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF THE N. Y. YACHT CLUB,
NEW YORK, August 1, 1870.

SIR.—I am requested by the Flag Officer of the Squadron to communicate to you the following order of the Commodore:—

Ordered, That the yachts intending to join the squadron on their annual cruise rendezvous at Glen Cove on Wednesday, the 10th day of August inst., at 4 o'clock P. M., of that day, and that on reporting to the commodore, or senior officer in command, they will at the same time report the names of the guests on board their respective vessels. Squadron numbers will be assigned the yachts on their reporting to the officer in command. By order of Commodore H. G. Stebbins, C. H. BURNHAM, Flag Officer.

H. MORTON, Secretary N. Y. Y. C.

AMATEUR RACES.—A couple of boat races came off between amateur pullers at Lake Quonippowsett, Wakefield, Mass., on the evening of July 30th, under the management of Capt. J. F. Emerson and Messrs. J. C. Hartshorn and J. D. Emerson. The first race, which was started at 7½ o'clock, was for single wherries, for which there were five entries. The start was well made and the race throughout quite spirited. The result was that the first prize was taken by E. E. Emerson and the second by David Flanders. For the double wherry race there were also five entries. The start was well made and the race finely contested. The first prize was won by W. L. Coon and Warren Pierce and the second by M. J. Hill and John White.

NEW RACING SHELLS.—Alderman C. B. Elliott, of Greenpoint, L. I., has launched two beautiful shells lately. One is a four oar for the Paris crew, which they will row in their match race with the Tyne or champion crew of Great Britain, at Lachine, Canada, in September, 43 feet long, 18¾ inches wide, and 8 inches deep. The other is a six oar for the Passaic Club, of Newark, N. J., of the following dimensions:—49 feet long, 20 inches wide and 8¼ inches deep. Both are built of Spanish cedar. In our report of the College regatta last week we inadvertently gave the credit of furnishing the Yale University shell to another builder, when it was constructed at the establishment of Elliott.

THE TURF.

AMERICAN TURF.

RE-INSTATEMENT OF FORD, THE JOCKEY.—It will be remembered that John Ford, the well-known jockey, was last year ruled off the Saratoga Course, and as a legitimate consequence, from all other race courses in the United States, for alleged foul riding of Vauxhall in the race for the Saratoga Cup, although the charge made against him of "pulling" Vauxhall, was not proven, and indeed disbelieved by many experienced turfmen who saw the race, and attributed the horse's defeat by Bayonet to the fact that Ford's stirrup leather broke, and his control of the horse consequently lost, the judges (at the instance of prominent parties connected with the Association, who had bet heavily on Vauxhall, and were anxious to save their money), declared all bets on Vauxhall off, and ruled Ford off the course. This year the same association re-instates Ford, thus virtually acknowledging the injustice of their previous sentence, while their object in having their Vauxhall bets was accomplished. It is to be hoped that the Lexington (Ky.,) authorities will now reinstate the jockey Robert Swim, who two years ago was ruled off the course, and thus debarred from following his profession elsewhere, for what was generally acknowledged to be an accidental case of foul riding. He has surely been punished severely enough for his offence, even had it not been purely accidental, and in the present scarcity of good jockeys, his return to the saddle would be a source of gratification to numerous owners and trainers of race horses.

POINT BREEZE PARK, PHILADELPHIA.—A brilliant and successful racing meeting has just been concluded at Long Branch, and now the management of the Point Breeze Park, at Philadelphia, are exerting themselves to insure a like success for a trotting meeting to be held on that course on the 6th, 7th, 8th and 9th of September, the premiums for which amount to thirteen thousand dollars. There are to be races for horses that never trotted better than 2:50, as well as for those that have not shown better than 2:35, 2:30, 2:26, 2:24, etc. On the closing day, Friday, Sept. 9th, a purse of four thousand dollars is offered, open to all, with $2,200 to first horse, $1,200 to second, and $600 to third. The programme of the sport is published in another column, to which the attention of those interested is requested. A notice to horsemen is also given, and it is to be hoped that the trotting stock will aid and encourage the Point Breeze Park management in their efforts to insure an attractive and successful meeting. The Park is of very easy access, and, with some of our flyers as contestants for the liberal premiums offered, there ought to be a very large attendance.

SPORT AT MEDFORD, MASS.—Mystic Park was the centre of attraction for a goodly number of Bostonians on Aug. 3d, three races being announced to take place there. The initial event was a match for $250, mile heats, best 3 in 5, in harness, between Fannie and Nellie. Five heats were trotted, the latter capturing the first and third, after Fannie the other three and the race; best time, 2:47¾, final heat. Butcher Girl and the brown mare Turkey then tried their powers in opposition. Three heats were trotted, the mare taking the first and third heats and Turkey the second, but the men who had money invested on the race complained of unfair driving on the part of the pilot of Turkey, and the judges ordered Mr. Bowen to handle the reins, and the driver refusing to do so, gave them up he was ruled off the track. The third race was between the brown mare Nellie and the bay mare Bess, the first named winning the first heat, when the driver of Bess took her from the track and the race was given to Nellie.

DEXTER'S LATEST PERFORMANCE.—On the afternoon of July 30th Mr. Robert Bonner drove Dexter to a road wagon, half a mile, on the Fleetwood Park track, in 1:06¾. The time, we are informed, was taken by Mr. Edward Knapp, Jr., and other gentlemen, while Mr. Dunn Walton, a practical horseman and experienced timer, made it 1:07. It considerably qualifies this apparently surprising performance to add that the first half mile on the above track is nearly all down hill, an immense advantage in timing a horse's performance. The last half mile is on the ascent, but the full mile was not trotted, or probably the feat would not have appeared so wonderful after all.

MATCH PROPOSED.—During the recent Saratoga meeting Mr. Belmont expressed his readiness to match his four year old colt Glenelg, by Citadel, dam Babta, against Messrs. McCormick and Page's three year old Hamburg, weight for age, dash of a mile and a half, for $10,000 or $20,000 a side. In view of the numerous heavy engagements in ride stakes that Hamburg has, his owners declined to entertain the proposition at the present time.

FIRE AT THE POINT BREEZE TROTTING PARK.—On the night of Tuesday, Aug. 2d, a number of sheds connected with the above Philadelphia track, were destroyed by fire, involving a loss of several thousand dollars, it is said.

THE ENGLISH TURF.

The Newcastle, Newmarket and Reading Meetings.

DEFEAT OF BLUE GOWN AT LYONS—SUCCESS OF THE AMERICAN-BRED UMPIRE AS A RACING SIRE—ENTRIES FOR THE DERBY, OAKS AND ST. LEGER OF 1872—SALE OF LORD STAMFORD'S RACING STUD; HIS ENORMOUS LOSSES ON THE TURF.

Following close on the Ascot racing re-union came the Newcastle meeting in the coaly north, rich in the memories of its Northumberland Plate and Gold Cup, of Beeswing and Lanercost, Underhand and Caller Ou. Perhaps nowhere in England, not even in Yorkshire, is the love of racing more deeply impianted than among the hard toiling coal miners of Northumberland. The race for the Cup or Plate excites all their enthusiasm, as in the days when their idolised Beeswing, bred and owned in the county, carried off the former six years in succession, and was only prevented by the renowned Lanercost from winning it the seventh time. The pony-built Underhand succeeded the old mare in their affections, and when he won the Northumberland Plate three successive years their enthusiasm knew no bounds. The white and crimson spots of Lord Zetland are now their favorite colors, and this year they cheered to the echo when his Voltigeur colt Falkland won the North Derby by a neck, after a splendid race, from the favorite, Agility. In Her Majesty's Plate Torreador revenged his stable companion, Agility's defeat, by beating Lord Zetland's Brennus by a neck. The evergreen old horse, Honesty, carrying the top weight in both races, won the Members' Plate and Corporation Cup, and the three year old colt Morphia also achieved a double victory in the Trial Stakes and Lambton Plate. The Exciseman, a horse trained by Thomas Dawson, who was backed for a good deal of money for the Derby, but did not start, won the Stephenson Biennial, and will doubtless find his way into the St. Leger betting quotations. Eight horses started for the Northumberland Plate, formerly one of the heaviest betting races in the north, but now falling off in importance. It was won by Kensington, a three year old by Oxford, formerly belonging to the Duke of Newcastle, who won in a canter, his stable companion, Myosotis, being second, a position he also gained last year to The Spy. Kennington was backed very heavily at 5 to 2 for this race, and his party won a large stake; he carried the highest weight (98 lbs) that any three year old has ever won it with. Mr. Savory won the Seaton Delaval Stakes for two year olds with King of the Forest, by Scottish Chief, carrying 125 lbs., in clever style, and he at once established his position as first favorite for the Derby of 1871, now that his stable companion, Perth, who had hitherto stood at the head of quotations, had broken down. Mr. Merry thus keeps up his character for having annually the Derby favorite in his stable, as in the case of Sunshine, Beiladrum, Marksman, Student, Leddington, Dundee, Scottish Chief, etc. How formidable he this year is may be judged from the fact that his Derby lot contains seven candidates:—King of the Forest, Rifleman, Perth, colt by Scottish Chief out of Neckiace (Macgregor's dam), colt by Thormanby out of Miss Ann, colt by Stockwell out of Sunflower, and colt by Scottish Chief out of Lady Surewell. As an instance of how often race horses run in England after traveling great distances, we may mention that Kennington, after winning the Northumberland plate at 4.30 P. M., was dispatched from Newcastle by rail to Hampton, in Surrey, a distance of 300 miles, and, traveling all night, was enabled to run for the Surrey and Middlesex stakes about the same hour next day, an exploit worthy of Old Fisherman. Kennington, however, could not repeat his Newcastle victory, for he was unable to give Choral 17 lbs. and two years, and was beaten a length.

Blue Gown has sustained defeat on his first appearance on the continental turf since he was purchased by Prince Pless of Sir Joseph Hawley for $25,000. He ran at Lyons on the 19th ult. for the Grand Prize of the City of Lyons, worth $5,000, and, although favorite against the field, the Weiter weight he carried told on him so much that he was actually last in a field of six horses. The course, however, was a wretched one, but full of turns, and wholly unsuited to Blue Gown's long, raking stride. The winner of the race was a mare called Maudlinea, by Fying Dutchman, who carried 125 lbs., or 22 lbs. less than Blue Gown.

The Newmarket July meeting is one of the pleasantest gatherings of the year, although it has no Two Thousand Guineas, Cesarewitch or Cambridshire important events to distinguish it. Still it can boast of its interesting July, Chesterfield and Exeter stakes, which have so often foreshadowed other great events. Sir Joseph Hawley drew first blood by winning a handicap plate with Waif, by Thormanby, from twelve others, among them Plash, Stephanoida, Tibthorpe and Patrician. Lord Roseberry won the Gladiateur Stakes with his two year old, Ellesmere, and King of Scots brought himself into prominent betting for the St. Leger by beating easily Perfume, Green Riband, and three others for a sweepstakes, and then winning the Town Plate. The July Stakes, for two year olds, was won by Baron Rothschild's sister to Breeze, by King Tom, after an exciting race, beating Count La Grange's General (second), Cyclone (third), the highly bred Balvenie, and Tullibardine and eight others. The Baron's stable was in great force, for he won the Filly Stakes, the Exeter Stakes and the Chesterfield Stakes, all for two year olds, and worth close on $12,000, with Coriander, a promising daughter of King Tom, who won her three races in grand style. McAlpine, a two year old by Blair Athol, won the sweepstakes of $2,500 each, three subscribers, easily; and Lord Zetland's Myrtle, a legacy from the lately deceased Mr. Watt, won the Queen's Plate for his new owner by a great distance, beating, among others, the St. Leger and Oaks victress, Formosa.

There was nothing worthy of note at the Reading meeting beyond the victory of the aptly named two year old filly Appeal, who won the Forbury Nursery in a field of ten starters very cleverly. Appeal is by the American bred horse Umpire, by Lecompte, dam Alice Carneal, that Mr. Ten Broeck took to England in 1858, and who started first favorite for the Derby in 1860, won by Thormanby. This is the second of Umpire's stock that has started, and both have proved winners, a fact showing the benefit of infusing new blood in breeding race horses.

At Nottingham, Kensington, the Northumberland Plate winner came out in great form, for, carrying the crushing weight, for a three year old, 124lbs., he won the Nottinghamshire Handicap so easily that there is little doubt he is the best three year old of the season. It is quite possible that, but for his late owner, the Duke of Newcastle's embarrassments preventing him starting, he would have won the Derby, and thus retrieved the turf losses of his original possessor, at whose sale he only realized $1,800.

The entries for the Derby, Oaks and St. Leger of 1872 show a decline compared with those for the same stakes for 1871. The nominations for the Derby are 191 against 211, a decrease of 20; those for the Oaks, 175 against 193, a trifling falling off; and those for the St. Leger, 106 against 119, or a decrease of 23. The deaths of Lord Glasgow and Derby and the non-appearance of the Duke of Newcastle, Mr. Chaplin and Mr. Cuthwaite from the list of nominators, sufficiently accounts for the comparatively trifling falling off observable in the three great events for 1872.

The entire stud of the Earl of Stamford was sold at auction at Newmarket during the July meeting. Good prices were realized; a yearling chestnut filly, by Newcastle, dam Donna Del Lago, bringing $3,250; a bay filly, by Citadel (sire of Gleneig), dam by Touchstone, $1,600; a chestnut colt, by Newcastle, dam by Stockwell, $3,150; a bay colt, by Cambuscan, dam by Voltigeur, $2,100; a two year old chestnut colt, by King Tom, dam by Newminster, $3,600; and the three year old chestnut colt Normanby, by Thormanby, dam Emily, for $10,500. It is stated that since Lord Stamford's accession to the turf, he has spent or lost upwards of $5,000,000 over racing. He has never won the Derby or St. Leger, but the 2,000 guineas race fell to him through Diophantus, although all his money was on Imaus, his stable companion, who had cleaned out the winner in a trial very easily a few days before the race. Whether the present retirement is a final one cannot be safely stated, for on previous occasions his Lordship's secession from the turf has been positively announced, but the old love was too strong, and he always returned to it after a brief retirement.

At a recent meeting of the Jockey Club, held in London, to take into consideration the present state of the English turf, it was proposed and carried:—First. That no two year olds should be allowed to run before the 1st of May, or in any handicap before the 1st of October, and then only with horses of the same age. Second. That no two year olds be allowed to run in any plate or stake with older horses before October 1st, and that no two year olds should run more than six furlongs for any plate or sweepstakes. Third. That the nominations for free handicaps shall not be published before the weights, nor the acceptances and declarations of forfeit for any other handicap earlier than the Thursday preceding the week in which the race is to run. Fourth. That no three year olds or upwards shall run a shorter distance than five furlongs for any plate or sweepstakes. Fifth. That post entries be abandoned, and a committee of the stewards and two other members of the Jockey Club be appointed to suggest a new scale of weights for age, according to the distance and time of the year. The measures are well calculated to effect a reform of many existing turf abuses.

We observe that Blue Gown's recently won the Henekel Prize at a recent Hamburg meeting, beating three opponents with great ease. The breaking out of hostilities will cause interruption of this horse's turf career this season.

QUOITING.

LONG ISLAND vs. NATIONAL, OF WILLIAMSBURGH.

The first match between the National Quoit Club, of Williamsburgh, L. I., and the Long Islanders, took place on the grounds of the former, corner of Leonard and North Second streets, on Thursday afternoon, Aug. 4th. The day was fine, and the admirers of this old country pastime gathered in large numbers to witness the sport, aware that it would be something considerably above the average degree of excellence. The sides were captained by Messrs. Joyce and Laban, who tossed for choice of lead about half past two o'clock. The Nationals were represented in the opening game by Garvie and Morrison, while Rathwell and Stayler cast the discs for the Long Island Club. The latter couple both secured double figures at single ends, and, after playing one hour, their side was declared victors, scoring 21 to 5, Rathwell leading with 12 points.

The second game was contested by McCullough and Jones for the Nationals, and Hoillily and Seaton for Long Island; and, as the Nationals presented their strongest man in this game, they came out the victors by a score of 21 to 13, McCullough leading the score with 12, marked by two doubles; Seaton got nine, with two doubles, and both men made some very fine casts. This game also occupied an hour.

The third game brought forth Baldwin and Joyce and Holden and Uris as contestants, and the latter being the cracks of the Long Island Club, they were the victors by a total of 21 to 5, Uris leading with 12, Holden being credited with no less than three doubles; time, 25 minutes. The game was the best of the match.

The fourth game was also won by Moran and Gallagher, against Eastwood and Mitchelson, the "ends," at times being marked by winning "casts" at least four or five inches from the "nest." This game was also played in half an hour, Gallagher leading the score with 11, marked by doubles.

The last game was played between Johnson and Ficket, and Laban and Mitchelson, and when this game began Long Island only led the Nationals by a score of 61 to 52. But the veterans soon ended the contest, scoring 21 to the Nationals' 7, Latham leading with a score of 11, marked by some good doubles.

Below we present the score of the match:—

First Game.—Long Island.—Rothwell, 12; Shaler, 9—21. National—Morrison, 4; Garvey, 1—5.
Second Game.—Leaton, 9; Hollily, 4—13. McCullock, 12; Jones, 9—21.
Third Game.—Holder, 9; Uris, 12—21. Baldwin, 3; Joyce, 2—5.
Fourth Game.—Eastwood, 4; Mitchelson, 2—6. Gallagher, 11; Moran, 10—21.
Fifth Game.—Laban, 10; Latham, 11—21. Pickett, 3; Johnson, 4—7. Totals.—Long Island, 82; National, 60.

The contest over, both the clubs sat down to a collation given by the Nationals, and the appearance of the table when the "discussion" was ended, attested that the good things with which they were laden so bounteously were fully enjoyed. The respective presidents made appropriate remarks, in response to toasts, and Messrs. Joyce, Shaw, Cullinan and "Dobbs" added not a little to the harmony of the occasion by songs and recitations. At nine o'clock the visiting club retired, carrying with them the well wishes of the Nationals.

QUOIT MATCH.

A game of quoits came off on July 30th, at Gardner, Ill., between Jas. Reside, of Braidwood, and Wm. Brown, of the former place. The game was 61 points up, for $50 a side. It was well contested all through, although it had not gone far when it was clearly manifested that Reside was the better player. He gained a lead on his opponent in the outset and kept it throughout the game, coming out the victor by 14 points. Very much enthusiasm was displayed as the game progressed, and a good deal of money exchanged hands.

MATCH AT HOBOKEN.—There will doubtless be a large turn-out of the Killies at the Quoit ground, on Eleventh street, Hoboken, N. J., on Thursday, 11th inst., when a game for $250 a side will take place between Capt. Montgomery, 79th Highlanders, and Thomas Walker, of the Hoboken Caledonian Club; play to commence at 2 o'clock P. M.

PEDESTRIANISM.

HARRIS VS. CRANDALL AND ADAMS.—The matches recently made between Young Harris and Hen. Crandall and Harris and Geo. Adams go on all right, we understand. The first takes place at Middletown, N. Y., on August 8th, and that with Adams on Aug. 30th, Crandall staking $700 to $500, 75 yards, and the other match being for $500 a side. Crandall is training in the vicinity of Binghamton, under the care of Cozad and Adams, while Harris is taking his breathers at Middletown, with John Walker as body guard. E. D. Davis will be at the scratch with the latter in both races, and Cozad will wait upon Crandall and Adams. All are crack runners—indeed, it has been a very long time since such a galaxy of pedestrian talent has been arrayed—and fast time will doubtless be witnessed by the large number of spectators reasonably expected to be present. Crandall is in his 27th year, stands 5ft. 8¼in. in height, and weighs 160lbs. He beat Wharton, the Hebron Boy, at Niles, Mich., 100 yards, for $500; Wm. Johnson, 150 yards, $500 a side, Provo, O.; Ike Williams, colored, 150 yards, $1,000, Niles; Geo. Adams, 150 yards, $1,000, Ft. Wayne, Ind.; was defeated by Tom Cox, 150 yards, $1,000, Youngstown, O.; by Burgess, of Woodstock, Ont., 100 yards, $250 a side, Niles; by Wm. Kendricks, 70 yards, $1,000, Saginaw, Mich.; by John W. Cozad, Buchanan, Mich. These are some of the more important of his many races. In the opinion of many he is the fastest 75 or 100 yard runner in the country to-day, bar Cozad and Davis. Harris has not figured extensively in public, his only race of importance being with Wharton, 150 yards, $500, which he won very handily. He also beat Wm. Kendricks in two races, 150 yards each, and was defeated by him in a 100 yard race. He attained his nineteenth birthday in February last, stands 5 ft. 8¾ in. in height, and weighs 140lbs. in trim. For the last fourteen months he has been under the care of John Walker, who, for some time, kept up a brisk canonade upon the ranks of the A 1 runners, the result of which bombardment has been the two matches under consideration. It is probable that Bill Young, the tall son of Philadelphia, will be on hand to brush Harris up the home-stretch, so that there is every likelihood that school will be in when those two races come off. The prospects are bright for a fine contest, or rather contests.

A SECOND SAM PATCH.—About three hundred people, including a number of ladies, assembled at the Lake Shore Railway bridge, Buffalo, on the afternoon of July 27th, to witness Frank Thorne make a leap from the bridge into the creek. About 5 o'clock Frank appeared on the upper part of the bridge, dressed in "trunks," and was greeted with any amount of applause. The intrepid jumpist responded by gracefully waving his hand to the crowd and almost immediately started on a run for the verge. Without the slightest hesitation he jumped off, and, descending in a perfectly perpendicular position, his hands and arms being kept close to his body, struck the water fairly, and disappeared beneath the surface. Scarcely had the excited crowd relieved their anxiety by a long drawn breath when Mr. Thorne reappeared, and boldly struck out for the shore, swimming in a manner which fully testified to his uninjured condition. As he landed upon the somewhat muddy bank he was again vociferously cheered. The distance from the top of the bridge to the water is a little less than fifty feet. Some little inconvenience was experienced from the near proximity of the telegraph wires to the jumping point, necessitating a running jump of about six feet to clear them.

SAML S. BLAMDELL AND BURTON MCLELLAN walked three miles around the Public garden, Boston, on the 1st inst. The latter won, accomplishing the distance in 27:20, half a minute ahead. Wm. Woods also walked three quarters of a mile in 7 minutes.

JOHN WALKER writes to us, saying that his protege, Harris ("Herzog") will be matched with "Heimbold," if he defeats Crandall and Adams.

FIGEON POP.—A shooting match for $50, single birds, came off near Cincinnati July 27th, between Charles McCaslf and T. Jones. The former killed 48 birds out of 50, and the latter 37. The match was for 50 birds, but as Jones could not possibly even tie he gave up without further effort.

THE RING.

RING FIGHT IN MARYLAND.

WILLIAM SHEDMAN DEFEATS JOSEPH SNYDER.

Our regular Baltimore correspondent sends us the following particulars of a fight which is said to have taken place within a few miles of that city, on July 26th, between Wm. Shedman and Jos. Snyder, for $50 a side. It was an off-hand affair, the match having been made on the 21st ult. The spot chosen was on the Philadelphia road, near Bay View, and at exactly half-past four A. M. they began milling operations, Shedman being waited upon by Jim Flake and Country Sloam, and Snyder having Tom Whitford and Jack Lynch for Esquires.

THE FIGHT.

Round 1. Snyder, after a little fiddling, led off, but was stopped, his opponent sending in a left-hander, which landed on Joe's stomach and brought him to grass. Claim of foul made by Snyder's second—not allowed.

2. Shed. now took the initiative, letting drive at Snyder's shoulder, the latter returning on the mouth pretty heavily. Some quick exchanges followed, when Bill put on the cross buttock, throwing Joe with force and adding his own weight.

3. They rushed at each other like wild cats, giving and taking hammer and tongs fashion, for three minutes, when Joe went to grass, again claiming foul, which was not allowed, as there were no grounds for the appeal.

4. Snyder manifesting an inclination to hang back, Shed. went to his corner after him, and effected a lodging place for two successive nobs, one on the left optic and the other on the nasal organ. Joe failed on the right eye and breast and then retired to mother earth, Shed giving him a parting poultice on the top of the nut as he went down.

5. Shedman, bent on forcing the fighting, "went for" his antagonist the instant he toed the mark, but Snyder retreated, seemingly anxious to keep out of harm's way and maintain the defensive. Sped, not to be denied, followed Joe up and succeeded in planting a one, two, three, without any change, when Snyder got down to avoid further mauling.

6. Joe, seemingly irritated by the jibes showered upon him by the friends of his opponent, dashed in as soon as he faced Shedman, hitting the latter heavily on the right lamp and body, but catching him on the ear and left eye in return. Shed. now got Joe's head in chancery, and fibbed away merrily, finally cross-buttocking him.

7. The shaking which Snyder had received by the heavy fall in the previous round caused him to respond very slowly to the call of time. Bill waited for him

Introductory Overture.

MONDAY, Aug. 8th, 1870.

WE HAVE BEEN in the country, meandering among the "tripping streams;" gathering honey from the "scented flowers;" inhaling draughts of pure and invigorating air that settles on the mountain top and in the valley deep; "walking in the starlight" beneath the cerulean blue which canopies this vast expanse of terrestrial matter; exploring for the emerald rined melon, whose treasures of roseate hue are meat and drink to those ahungered and athirsted; swinging on the gate, while listening to the soft and touching notes of the country lass whose fortune it is to be our guide and instructor in these rural, ah, too rural, expeditions amid the wild woods where the feet of man never trod before, probably. It is good to be in the country, barring the bite of the laughing mosquito, the sting of the industrious bumble bee; yes, it is joy unspeakable to feel the fresh breath of the morning zephyrs as they are wafted o'er the parched and fevered face of nature, refreshing all animal life, and giving us a new lease of that existence of which at the best we have but a brief tenure. Now what do you care about all this? What interest can you have in our rural wanderings and sentimentalising on the beauties of nature? But our object is not to exasperate you with a recital of the good times we have had in the country, with fresh milk and vittles; sweet slices of bacon and crispiy-browned eggs; home made bread, fried potatoes, coffee that brings tears to eyes unused to weep as we chink of the beans and other stuff forced down our unwilling throats by inhuman landladies, and palmed upon us as real Java; apple pies, fresh from the hands of the country housewife; and little bits of dishes which only country folks know how to prepare and how to eat; we say we do not mean to irritate you with midsummer dreams like these, while you are compelled to remain immolated on the shrine of Mammon, or peradventure on the altar of the convivial Bacchus. No; let others tell of the scent of the new mown hay, of the jessamine, which the late lamented sailor boy saw in his dream, clambering "in flower o'er the thatch," and of the many other attractions to be found in the rustic life "where the woodbine twineth." Be ours the task to present to your notice an instance of the verdancy of the innocent country girl in her first visit to the metropolis, as evidenced in a letter written to her friend, our little country lass who chaperoned us in those never-to-be-forgotten walks beneath the summer skies, in the long lanes that have no turning, in the meadows where cattle rove at will and chew the cud through all the livelong day. We became the confidant of this rugged child of nature, and she, in her faith in man's virtue and innocence, gave into our keeping the letter of her friend, wherein is given in glowing colors an account of what she saw and heard on her first visit to the theatre. With the same faith in your innocence, dear reader, we place this letter before you, in strict confidence, knowing that you will let it go no farther:—

NEW YORK, July 6, 1870.

DEAR RUTH.—You know I have now been here three days. You would not believe, unless you could go and see for yourself, the game as I did, what an ungodly, cold blooded and wasteful set of people there is in this city. When I had been in town a day, cousin Bob asked me if I would go to a theatre. I asked him what I would see there, and he replied that I would see some acting. I told him that I hoped it was the right kind of acting, for I didn't care to see it, as our preacher tells us we should not go in for any acting except the right kind. Then the other folks tittered, though I am sure that was to laugh at goodness knows, I can't tell. So we concluded to go, Bob telling me that if I saw anything I didn't like for we could come out. Then they all giggled again—those city people laugh at nothing—they are very giddy and trifling, you wouldn't believe. Well, if was fixed we should go that night, and so after supper we started. After we had walked a good ways we came to a big house, looking something like a church, only a sight bigger. The first thing I saw when we went in was a big box concern, with a man inside, looking out at us through a hole. Cousin Bob took out a whole dollar bill and poked it through the hole, when the man who was shut up in the box gave him two red cards. I asked Bob what that man was shut up in the box for, and Bob giggled and said:—"For taking people's money." Then, says I, it serves him right, but I don't think it anything to laugh at, and I thought, but I did not say so, that if I had wanted to buy cards I would buy them of some decent people, and not from a thief; besides it was an wasteful of money to pay so much for two cards, no matter how pretty they are. Howsomever, we went in from there till we came to a door, with a man standing at it, and now I know you won't believe what I am going to tell you, but a bit of it; the man at the door says to Bob:—"How do do?" and put his hand to shake hands with Bob, and, as sure as you are born, instead of shaking hands, Bob gave him the two red cards he had just bought from the other thief for a dollar. Says I, "Bob, why didn't you sell them to somebody else if you didn't want to keep them? You city folks don't know the value of money." Then Bob giggled, and then he giggled, and then we went in and sat down. If I could I would tell you how awful grand and showy everything was with lights all over the house; it would most have made you think that the story about Jack and the Beanstalk was all true. There was three galleries, and where the orchestra was meant to be was a big picture right against the wall. The place was full of people, and we had to sit in one of the galleries close up to the wall, where we could see right down on to a place which was full of people all by themselves; a couple of them had fiddles, some had fiddles, and some had monstrous big brass horns. But you can't think how scandalous some of the people behaved; one boy hollered right out, "Hello, Sunny," and the person called Skinny replied, just as loud as the other, "oh, dry up." I don't know what that means, but many others stamped on the floor with all their might. Says I, "People who would cut up that way in our church would be put out." Says Bob, giggling all the time, "just wait till the first piece is over, and you'll see many a one put out." "And what for then instead of now?" says I. "Because," replied Bob, "they will want to get their bitters." And then the people what sot with us laughed like foolish little children. "What's bitters?" says I. "Why, something to drink," said he. But just then, while I was talking to Bob, I heard the awfullest racket among the fiddlers and things below us, which stopped in a minute, and we looked down! I saw the men with fiddles, and one or two with flutes, and one or two with long whistles made of wood, all playing at once; and it was all sounding very nice, I thought, but there was a fellar among them who was not pleased with their playing. He kept up shaking a stick first at one, and then the other, to make them stop; but they was bound to have their play out in spite of him; then he nodded to the fellers with the drums and the brass horns, and then they beat on the drums and blowed on the horns, and made the same awful racket I heard at first, all to drown the other men's playing and make them stop, just as they sing in our experience meetings to make anybody stop who is talking too long; and the man with the stick, he shook the stick at them more than ever, and oh! he was mad! mad; but the fiddle and flute men only went on more and faster to let them see they were not going to be played down, and they kept at it till they got done; but we could not get the good of it as we would if they hadn't been interrupted by the horns and drums. Well, they had hardly got done before the wall with the pictures on it began to roll up of itself, not a soul touching it; and if they had no mortal being could have rolled it up as high as a three story house, as it was; so it must have been of the devil's own carrying. But it is true what I tell you, and when it did roll up we could see right into the house next door; and there, in a room right before us, was a man and woman talking, and they didn't seem to mind us a bit. After they had talked a while they got to quarrelling, I think, for he took hold of her, and she hollored "Help, help; save me;" then another man ran in and throwed him down, and I never did see anybody fall down so easy as he did. Then the fellar that throwed him down said to the girl:—"Fear him not while I have an arm," then them two went away together, and the man on the floor got up and shook a knife at them as they went out, and said that he would find and pay me revenge. After a while the man and the same girl sitting at a table, and she talked about somebody that she was afraid would come after her; and away in the corner, behind some painted boards that was standing up, I could see somebody hiding. After the girl had talked about the man she was afraid of, she looked toward the person in the corner, and I could hear her say:—"Why don't you come on, quick?" Then the man came out where everybody could see him, and I noticed that it was the fellar that had been upset a few minutes before and now only see the deceit of the girl, for all she had told him to come, she screeched out:—"Tis he, 'tis he, as I feared." She seemed to be awful scared, but it was all put on, as you will see directly; but the man got in the room, and he ran after her; directly the man who had throwed him down came in and walked all around the floor, making a great fuss about his dear Annie. That was the same girl, you know; he was saying:—"Where shall I find her? Where shall I find her?" Then he looked under the table and went all round the room, looking for her; but he did not look very sharp, or he could have seen her, as I did, easy enough, a hiding behind them painted boards, and talking to the very man that had come out of the room. Then the fellar left her and came into the room, and both men got to fighting, and one pulled out a knife and stuck the other one. My! how the blood run, while the poor man fell on the floor, dead looking. I screamed out, and Bob told me to be quiet; and, would you believe it, the people sot all at them as one force of them police chaps was there but they never budged to stop the men from fighting or to arrest the murderer. Said I to Bob:—"Don't you see he has stuck that man?" "Oh," says Bob, "he has been worse than that before now." I asked him when, and he giggled and said, "When he has been scandalous some of the people behaved; one boy hollered right out, "Hello, Sunny," and the person called Skinny replied, just as loud as the other, "oh, dry up." I don't know what that means, but many others stamped on the floor with all their might. Says I, "People who would cut up that way in our church would be put out." Says Bob, giggling all the time, "just wait till the first piece is over, and you'll see many a one put out." "And what for then instead of now?" says I. "Because," replied Bob, "they will want to get their bitters." And then the people what sot with us laughed like foolish little children. "What's bitters?" says I. "Why, something to drink," said he. But just then, while I was talking to Bob, I heard the awfullest racket among the fiddlers and things below us, which stopped in a minute, and we looked down! I saw the men with fiddles, and one or two with flutes, and one or two with long whistles made of wood, all playing at once; and it was all sounding very nice, I thought, but there was a fellar among them who was not pleased with their playing. He kept up shaking a stick first at one, and then the other, to make them stop; but they was bound to have their play out in spite of him; then he nodded to the fellers with the drums and the brass horns, and then they beat on the drums and blowed on the horns, and made the same awful racket I heard at first, all to drown the other men's playing and make them stop, just as they sing in our experience meetings to make anybody stop who is talking too long; and the man with the stick, he shook the stick at them more than ever; and oh! he was mad! mad; but the fiddle and flute men only went on more and faster to let them see they were not going to be played down, and they kept at it till they got done; but we could not get the good of it as we would if they hadn't been interrupted by the horns and drums. Well, they had hardly got done before the wall with the pictures on it began to roll up of itself, not a soul touching it; and if they had no mortal being could have rolled it up as high as a three story house, as it was; so it must have been of the devil's own carrying. But it is true what I tell you, and when it did roll up we could see right into the house next door; and there, in a room right before us, was a man and woman talking, and they didn't seem to mind us a bit. After they had talked a while they got to quarrelling, I think, for he took hold of her, and she hollered of the principal cities on or about September 5th. The troupe will consist of the French Wrestlers, Mons. D'Atalie, "the man with the iron jaw," Mlle. Angela, the "female Sampson;" George Forde, the "patter" singer, of whom we shall have something further to say next week, Mlle. Du Maurier, prima donna soprano; J. Hartley Milburn, serio comic vocalist, and a farce company. Parties desirous of engaging this troupe can address Samuel Colville as per advertisement.

Negro Minstrelsy.

JOHNNY MACK, the minstrel, the record of whose death we published in our last issue, was born in Pittsburgh, Pa., in 1836. He first entered the show business as an apprentice in Robinson's Circus, but after a short time he abandoned that for the minstrelsy, which he followed until the day of his death. He made his first appearance in that branch of the profession in Boston, Mass. He was in California some four years, during which time he was stage manager and leader of the comic business at the old Temple of Music, Maguire's Opera House, and the Alhambra Theatre, and it was at the latter that he made his last appearance, during the engagement of the Zavistowski Sisters. He had been for some months too unwell to pursue his avocation, and his final decline was very rapid. He was the adapter of numerous farces and burlesques, though their character was such that their popularity was only ephemeral. He died of consumption, although his death was undoubtedly hastened by imprudent conduct.

DAN BRYANT, during his recent visit to St. Louis, was presented with a splendid set of serviceable tinware by his friends in that city, on the occasion of the tenth anniversary of his marriage.

M. B. LEAVITT and Hattie Forrest appeared in their sensation and olio entertainment at Columbus, Nebraska, on August 3d; Fremont, 4th, and will close after a performance in Omaha, 5th.

JOHNNY MCVEIGH joined Skiff and Gaylord's Minstrels at Louisville, Ky., on August 1st.

BRYANT'S MINSTRELS appeared at the Crosby Opera House, Chicago, Ill., on August 1st, to a house filled in every part. They remained during the week, and on August 8th Dan Bryant took a benefit, when he appeared in a white face and played "Handy Andy."

MANNING'S MINSTRELS opened at the Dearborn Theatre, Chicago, Ill., for the regular season, on August 1st. The house was crowded and all the company were most enthusiastically received. After entering upon the stage they sang one verse of "Home Again" and then took their seats. Hogan and Hughes and little Stevie Rogers are the fresh additions to the troupe.

DICK DUPONT, comedian, song and dance man, &c., and Ed. Manning, comedian and end man, advertise that they can be engaged,

KELLY & LEON'S MINSTRELS gave one performance at the Griswold Opera House, Troy, August 2d, to a house crowded in every part, even the aisles being filled. In the first part they had ten performers, with S. S. Purdy and Dave Wilson on the ends, and Edwin Kelly as interlocutor. They play at Springfield, Mass., on August 8th; Providence, R. I., 9th and 10th; Newport, 11th; Hartford, Conn., 12th, and New Haven, 13th. Their business agent, Charles Melville, while in Buffalo recently, was presented with a handsome Masonic breastpin.

DAN BRYANT'S MINSTRELS will appear at the Opera House, Detroit, Mich., August 8th, 9th and 10th; White's Hall, Toledo, O., 11th; Academy of Music, Cleveland, O., 12th and 13th.

LA RUE'S MINSTRELS commenced a six nights' engagement at the Opera House, St. Paul, Minn., August 1st. Billy Reeve and Ned West are the end men and Ricardo is the prima donna.

Amateur.

THE SHAKESPEARE DRAMATIC ASSOCIATION of Philadelphia are getting everything in readiness for the opening of the sixth season. During the summer vacation new cushioned seats have been introduced, making it the most comfortable hall in the city. They have also had new gas fixtures placed in the room, and a change in the gas arrangement of the stage. The company with few exceptions will remain as last season. Mr. Guanis, leading man, Mr. Bartram, "the old man," Mr. Huffish, comedian, and other new faces will probably be presented at the opening of the season, Sept. 1st.

THE SHAKESPEARE DRAMATIC ASSOCIATION of Philadelphia, Pa., will resume their performances on September 1st. During the recess they have painted and refurnished their room. On August 1st they were presented with a large picture of Thomas Mortimer, Esq.

FOREIGN SHOW NEWS.

Dramatic.

OUR LONDON, Eng., advices note few changes at the theatres. The Adelphi, Queen's, Gaiety, Olympic, Prince of Wales, Princess', St. James, Vaudeville and the Gresham continue the same programmes. On July 16th the New Royalty was opened for a benefit to Mr. H. Beeh Granville. Many of the artists who had voluntarized their services disappointed him at the eleventh hour, which caused the omission of some pieces and the substitution of others.

.....At the Haymarket a new five act play, written in blank verse, entitled "Helen Vaughan," was produced July 26th, with Miss Evelyn in the title role. The audience was very small, and the play, although smoothly written, "contained not a single line that could be quoted in evidence of poetic feeling or original thought." The scene was laid in Scotland, and it was the old story told in an unimpressive manner, and may be set down as a dire failure. The production of a tragic play in midsummer, with a novice in the leading role, and a company composed in a great measure of amateurs, was certainly foolhardy, and a different result need not have been expected..... At the Victoria a bold venture was made by Mr. Cave in presenting a play constructed upon novel principles. He placed the distinctly unconnected stories of "The Seven Poor Travelers," by Charles Dickens, on the stage as one play. The method adopted was as follows:—A Christmas Eve at Watt's Charity in Rochester, wherein it is known, any one on tramp, not being a rogue or a pensioner, may receive a night's lodging and food, and in the morning fourpence to help him on his way, shows us at the supper table the subjects of the different tales; but, after it is agreed that Lorraine shall not be whisked away in the story telling fashion, the dreariness of listening to a narrative by an individual is got rid of by every tale being given as a separate performance, in which all the persons engaged in the story are represented by actors. Added to this, and as an introduction to each little drama, is the chorus, which takes us back to old Greek days, but is more lively than the institution at that time is reported to have been, inasmuch as after the announcement is made of what the past piece is to be, some interesting music is made of what the past piece is to be, some interesting music is given by Mr. Ernest Fox, Miss Carrelli, and Miss Ada Carrelli. In this way all the stories of the seven travelers are depicted. The plot of them it is not necessary to describe; but the marvel is how so many separate stories could be placed on the boards in a manner so acceptable to a play loving neighborhood.....At the Britannia, a new Hibernian drama, entitled the "Emerald Queen," by W. Travers, has attracted large audiences during the week ending July 23d. The play is in three acts, and is said to be interesting both in action and dialogue.....The Strand closed its season abruptly on Friday, July 22d. An announcement has been issued that it will re-open in September for the fall and winter season with the "School for Scandal" and a new and original burlesque.....At Mr. Creswick's farewell benefit prior to his departure for the United States, was announced at the Gaiety Theatre for July 30th, when the following artistes were to appear:—Mrs. Hermann Vezin, Miss Furtado, Miss Eleanor Bufton, Miss Reinhardt, Miss Amy Fawcitt, Miss Eliza Newton, Miss Lavis and Miss Ruth Herbert; Mr. Benjamin Webster, Mr. Hermann Vezin, Mr. Ashley, Mr. Eburne, Mr. O. J. Smith, Mr. H. Montague, Mr. H. Irving, Mr. David Fisher, Mr. Tom Thorne, Mr. G. Honey, Mr. W. H. Stephens, Mr. Rignold, Mr. Creyke and Mr. Creswick. The performance comprised a selection from Morton's comedy of the "Hear At Law," Rachel Honespun, Mr. D. James; Cicely Homespun, Eleanor Bufton, and Dick Dowlas, Mr. Crouch; all these artists from the Strand, followed by Ben, Webster's comedietta, "One Touch of Nature." William Penn Hokker, Benjamin Webster; Beaumont Fletcher, Mr. Ashley; Belgrave, W. H. Eburne; Jones, C. J. Smith; Constance Belmaine, Miss Eliza Newton. Miss Lavis and Miss Ruth Herbert; Mr. Benjamin Webster, Mr. Hermann Vezin, Mr. Ashley, Mr. Eburne, Mr. O. J. Smith, Mr. H. Montague, Mr. H. Irving, Mr. David Fisher, Mr. Tom Thorne, Mr. G. Honey, Mr. W. H. Stephens, Mr. Rignold, Mr. Creyck and Mr. Creswick. The performance comprised a selection from Morton's comedy of the "Hear At Law;"

RED DEAD BALL.

The undersigned beg to call the attention of the Base Ball fraternity, and of dealers in Base Ball materials, to the new Base Ball they have recently introduced, in answer to the demand for a Ball which would possess all the life in it requisite for skilled batting, while at the same time it would not have the elasticity in its composition likely to make it dangerous to field when batted hard or thrown swiftly. Our new Ball is not only made of the best yarn, covering from 1 to 1¼ oz. of the best unvulcanized rubber, but it is colored a dark red, thereby getting rid of the objectionable dazzling whiteness of the ordinary Ball, which bothers fielders and batsmen on a sunny day in the early part of every contest.

Entered According to Act of Congress, in the Year 1870, by PECK & SNYDER, In the Office of the Librarian of Congress, at Washington.

"THE RED BALL"
Is used by all the head experts of the metropolis in preference to all others, after one trial is had. Sample sent by mail, $1.75.
